To pound false weights, and scanty measures break?

Dryden's Jervaul.

BIGNESS. n. f. [from big.]

1. Bulk; greatness of quantity.

If panicum be laid below, and about the bottom of a root, it will cause the root to grow to an excessive bigness. Bacon.

People were surpris'd at the bigness and uncouth deformity of the camel.

The brain of man, in respect of his body, is much larger than any other animal's; exceeding in bigness three oxen's brains.

2. Size; whether greater or smaller.

Several sorts of rays make vibrations of several bignesses, which, according to their bignesses, excite sensations of several colours; and the air, according to their bignesses, excites sensations of several sounds.

BIGOT. n. f. [The etymology of this word is unknown; but it is supposed, by Camden and others, to take its rise from some occasional phrase.] A man devoted to a certain party; prejudicial in favour of certain opinions; a blind zealot. It is used often with is before the object of zeal; as, a bigot to the Cartesian tenets.

Religious spite, and pious spleen bred first

This quarrel, which to long the bigots nurs'd.

In philosophy and religion, the bigots of all parties are generally the most positive.

BIGOTED. adj. [from bigot.] Blindly prepossessed in favour of something; irrationally zealous; with is.

A furunculus is a painful tubercle, with a broad basis, arising in a cone. It is generally called a bile, and is accompanied with inflammation, pulsation, and tension.

Wifdom.

BILGE is a ship. The compass or breadth of the ship's bottom.

Sinuer.

To BILGE, v. n. [from the noun.] To spring a leak; to let in water, by striking upon a rock; a sea term.

Sinuer.

BILIOUS, adj. [from bilis, Lat.] Belonging to the bile. Voracious animals, and such as do not chew, have a great quantity of gall; and some of them have the biliary duct inserted into the pylorus.

Arbutus.

BILKINGGATE, n. f. [A cant word, borrowed from Bilkinggate in London, a place where there is always a crowd of low people, and frequent brawls and foul language.] Ribaldry; foul language.

There ships, fair that rick languish'd on the ground, And shameful bilkinggate her robes adorn.

Pope.

BILKINGGATE, adj. [from bilking, Lat.] Having, or speaking two tongues.

BILIOUS, adj. [from bilis, Lat.] Consisting of bile; partaking of bile.

Why bilious juice a golden light puts on, And floods of chyle in silver currents run. When the taste of the mouth is bitter, it is a sign of a redundancy of a bilious alkali.

Arbutus.

To BILK, v. a. [derived by Mr. Lj from the Gothic, bilican.] To cheat; to defraud; by running in debt, and avoiding payment.

Dryden.

But bilking for yeomen flood prepar'd. What comely, what fair can more delight, Than ginning hunger, and the pleasing fight Of your bilking hopes!

Dryden.

BILL, n. f. [bile, Sax. See BALL.] The beak of a fowl. Their bills were thwarted crossways at the end, and, with these, they would cut an apple in two at one snap.

Cervus's Survey of Cornwall.

It may be tried, whether birds may not be made to have greater or longer bills, or greater and longer talons.

Bacon's Natural History.

In his bill An olive leaf he brings, pacific sign!

Milton.

No crowing cock does there his wings display, Nor with his horny bill provoke the day.

Dryden.

BILL, n. f. [bile, Sax. tybble, a two edged axe.]

1. A kind of hatchet with a hooked point, used in country work, as a hedge bill; so called from its resemblance in form to the beak of a bird of prey.

Standing troops are servants arm'd, who use the lance and sword, as other servants do the forks, or the bill, at the command of those who entertain them.

Temple.

2. A kind of weapon anciently carried by the foot; a battle axe. Yet diffuse women manage rusty bills;

Shakspeare.

Against thy feet both young and old rebel.

BILL, n. f. [bill, French.]

1. A written paper of any kind.

He does receive Particular addition from the bill That writes them all alike.

Shakspeare.

2. An account of money.

Ordinary expence ought to be limited by a man's estate, and entered to the book, that the bill may be less than the estimation abroad.

Bacon.

3. A law presented to the parliament, not yet made an act.

No new laws can be made, nor old laws abrogated or altered, but by parliament; where bills are prepared, and presented to the two houses.

Bacon.

How now for mitigation of this bill, Urg'd by the commons? doth his majesty incline to it, or no?

Shakspeare.

4. An act of parliament.

There will be no way left for me to tell you that I remember you, and that I love you, but that one, which needs no open warrant, or secret conveyance; which no bill can precede, nor no kings prevent.

Atterbury.

5. A physician's prescription.

Like him that took the doctor's bill, And swallow'd it instead of his pill.

Hudibras.

The medicine was prepar'd according to the bill.

L'Estrange, fab. 183.

Let them, but under your superiours, kill, When doctors first have sign'd the bloody bill.

Dryden.

6. An advertisement.

And in despair, their empty pit to fill, Set up some foreign monster in a bill.

Dryden.

7. In law.

1. An obligation, but without condition or forfeiture for nonpayment. 2. A declaration in writing, that expresseth either the grief and the wrong, that the complainant hath suffered by the party complained of; or else some fault, that the party complained of hath committed against some law. This bill is sometimes offered to justices errants in the general assizes; but must to the lord chancellor. It containeth the fact complained of, the damages thereby suffered, and petition of process against the defendant for redress.

Coxe.

The fourth thing very maturely to be consulted by the jury, is, what sentence their finding the bill may have upon the kingdom.

Bayly.

8. A bill of mortality. An account of the numbers that have died in any district.

Arbutus.

Most who took in the weekly bill of mortality, made little other use of them, than to look at the list, how the burials created or decreased.

Growth.

So liv'd our fires, ere doctors learn'd to kill, And multiply'd with theirs the weekly bill.

Dryden.

9. A bill of fare. An account of the season of provisions, or of the dishes at a feast.

Arbutus.

It may seem somewhat difficult to make out the bill of fare for some of the forementioned suppers.

Arbutus.

10. A bill of exchange. A note ordering the payment of a sum of money in one place, to some person assigned by the drawer or remitter, in consideration of the value paid to him in another place.

Arbutus.

The comfortable sentences are our bills of exchange, upon the credit of which we lay our cares down, and receive provisions.

Taylor.

All that a bill of exchange can do, is to direct to whom money is due, or taken up upon credit, in a foreign country, shall be paid.

Locke.

To BILL, v. n. [from bill, a beak.] To careen, as doves by joining bills, to be fond.

Locke.

Doves, they say, will bill, after their pecking, and their muzzling.

Ben Jonson's Catiline.

Still amorous, and fond, and billings, Like Philip and Mary on a balling.

Hudibras.

They bill, they tread; Alcione compress'd, Seven days his brooding on her floating nest.

Dryden.

He that bears th' artillery of Jove, The strong pounc'd eagle, and the billing dove.

Dryden.

To BILL, v. a. [from bill, a writing.] To publish by an advertisement: a cant word.

Arbutus.

His masterpiece was a composition that he bill'd about under the name of a sovereign antidote.

L'Estrange.

BILLET, n. f. [billet, French.]

1. A small paper; a note.

When he found this little billet, in which was only written, Remember Cæsar, he was exceedingly confounded.

Clarendon.

2. A ticket directing soldiers at what house to lodge.

3. Billet doux, or a soft billet; a love letter.

Arbutus.

'Twas then, Belinda! if report say true, Thy eyes first open'd on a billet doux.

Pope.

Blawds and pimps will be carrying about billet doux.

Arbutus.

4. A small log of wood for the chimney.

Let us then calculate, when the bulk of a faggot or billet is desired and raised to the degree of fire, how vast a place it must take up.

Digby on Bores.

Their billet at the fire was found.

Pier.

To BILLET, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To direct a soldier by a ticket, or note, where he is to lodge.

Retire thee; go where thou art billeted:

Shakspeare.

Away, I say.

Shakspeare.

2. To quarter soldiers.

They remembered him of charging the kingdom, by billeting soldiers.

Ra-igh.

The counties throughout the kingdom were so incensed, and their affections poisoned, that they refused to suffer the soldiers to be billeted upon them.

Clarendon.

BILLIARDS, n. f. without a singular. [billard, Fr. of which that language has no etymology; and therefore they probably derived from England both the play and the name, which is corrupted from balliards, yards or sticks with which a ball is driven along a table. Thus Spenser:

Bayard's much unfit,

And shuttlecocks misceming manly wit. Haberd's Tale.

Haberd's Tale.

A game at which a ball is forced against another on a table. Let it alone; let's to billiards.

Shakspeare.

Even nose and cheek, withal, Smooth as is the billiard ball.

Ben. Johnson.

Some are forced to bound or fly upwards, almost like ivory balls meeting on a billiard table.

Swift.

When the ball obeys the stroke of a billiard stick, it is not any action of the ball, but bare passion.

Locke.

BILLOW, n. f. [bilg, Germ. help, Dan. probably of the same original with bulg, Sax. a bladder.] A wave swollen, and hollow.

From whence the river Dee, as silver clean, His tumbling billows roll with gentle roar.

Spenser.

Billows sink by degrees, even when the wind is down that first stirred them.

Warton.

Chafing Nereus with his trident throes The billows from the bottom.

Dryden.

But when loud billows laish the founding shore, The hoarse rough verse shall like the trident roar.

To B'LLow. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell, or roll, as a wave.

The billowing snow, and violence of the flow's,
That from the hills disperse their dreadful flow,
And o'er the vales collected ruin pour. Prior.

B'LLow. adj. [from billow.] Swelling; turbid; wavy.
And whitening down the mistily-undul'd stream,
Defends the billowy foam. Thomson.

Bin. n. f. [binne, Sax.] A place where bread, or corn, or wine, is deposited.

The most convenient way of picking hops, is into a long square frame of wood, called a bin. Mortimer.

As when from rooting in a bin,
All powder'd o'er from tail to chin,
A lively maggot falls out.

You know him by his hazel snout. Swift.

Bin. adj. [from binus, Lat.] Two; dual; double.

Bin. Arithmetic. A method of computation proposed by Mr. Leibnitz, in which, in lieu of the ten figures in the common arithmetic, and the progression from ten to ten, he has only two figures, and uses the simple progression from two to two. This method appears to be the same with that used by the Chinese four thousand years ago. Chambers.

To BIND. v. a. pret. I bound; particip. pass. bound, or bounden. binnean, Sax.

1. To confine with bonds; to enchain.
Wilt thou play with him as with a bird? or wilt thou bind him for thy maidens. Job.

2. To gird; to encwrap; to involve.
Who hath bound the waters in a garment. Psalm.

3. To fasten to any thing.
Thou shalt bind this line of scarlet thread in the window, which thou didst let us down by.

Keep my commandments, and live: and my law, as the apple of thine eye. Bind them upon thy fingers, write them upon the table of thine heart. Proverbs.

4. To fasten together.
Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles, to burn them. Matthew.

5. To cover a wound with dressings and bandages.
When he saw him, he had compassion on him, and went to him, and bound up his wounds. Luke.

Having filled up the bared cranium with our dressings, we bound up the wound. Hjerman.

6. To compel; to constrain.
Those causes, or imperial constitutions, which have not been received here, do not bind. Hale.

7. To oblige by stipulation, or oath.
If a man vow a vow, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond, he shall not break his word. Numeri.

Swear by the solemn oath, that binds the gods. Pope.

8. To oblige by duty or law.
Though I am bound to every act of duty,
I am not bound to that, all slaves are free to. Shakespeare.
Duties expressly required in the plain language of Scripture, ought to bind our consciences more than those which are but dubiously inferred. Watts.

9. To oblige by kindness.

10. To confine; to hinder.
Now I'm cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in
To faucy doubts and fears. Shakespeare.
You will sooner, by imagination, bind a bird from singing, than from eating or flying. Bacon.

Though passion be the most obvious and general, yet it is not the only cause that binds up the understanding, and confines it, for the time, to one object, from which it will not be taken off. Locke.

In such a dismal place,
Where joy ne'er enters, which the sun ne'er cheers,
Bound in with darkness, overpread with damps. Dryden.

11. To hinder the flux of the bowels; to make colicve.
Rhubarb hath manifestly in it parts of contrivations;
parts that purge, and parts that bind the body. Bacon.

The whey of milk doth loose, the milk doth bind. Herbert.

12. To restrain.

The more we are bound up to an exact narration, we want more life, and fire, to animate and inform the story. Felton.

13. To bind a book. To put it in a cover.
Was ever book, containing such vile matter,
So fairly bound? Shakespeare.

Those who could never read the grammar,
When my dear volumes touch the hammer,
May think books best, as richest bound. Prior.

14. To bind to. To oblige to serve some one.
If still thou dost retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Sell thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryden.

15. To bind to. To contract with any body.
Art thou bound to a wife, seek not to be loosed. 1 Cor.

16. To bind over. To oblige to make appearance.
Sir Roger was flattered with the reports concerning this woman, and would have bound her over to the country sessions. Addison.

To BIND. v. n.

1. To contract the parts together; to grow stiff and hard.
If the land life full of clots, and if it is a binding land, you must make it fine by harrowing of it. Mortimer.

2. To make colicve.

3. To be obligatory.

The promises and bargains for truck, between a Swiss and an Indian, in the woods of America, are binding to them, though they are perfectly in a state of nature, in reference to one another. Locke.

BIND. n. f. A species of hops.

The two best sorts are the white and the grey bind; the latter is a large square hop, and more hardy. Mortimer.

Binder. n. f. [from bind.] A band.

1. A man whose trade it is to bind books.

2. A man that binds shoaves.

Three binders, flood, and took the handfals reap
From boys that gather'd quickly up. Chapman.

A man, with a biner, may reap an acre of wheat in a day, if it stand well. Mortimer.

3. A fillet; a shred cut to bind with.

Upon that I laid a double cloth, of such length and breadth as might serve to encompass the fractured member; which I cut from each end to the middle, into three binders. Wjerman.

B'NDING. n. f. [from bind] A bandage.

This beloved young woman began to take off the binding of his eyes. Talor.

B'NDW'RD. n. f. [from binus, Lat.] The name of a plant.

It hath, for the most part, trailing stalks; the leaves grow alternately on the branches; the flower consists of one leaf, shaped like a bell, whose mouth is widely expanded; the ovary becomes a roundish membranous fruit, wrapped up within the flower cup; and is generally divided into three cells, each containing one angular seed. The species are thirty-six. 1. The common white great bindweed, vulgarly called berkbind. 2. Lesser field bindweed, with a rose coloured flower, vulgarly called great bind. 3. Common sea bindweed, with round leaves. 4. Great American bindweed, with spicuous yellow sweet scented flowers, commonly called Synopsis arbutus, or Synopsis arbutus. 5. White and yellow Spanish potatoes. 6. Red Spanish potatoes. 7. The jalap, &c.

The first of these species is a very troublesome weed in gardens; and the second sort is still a worse weed than the former. The third sort is found upon gravelly or sandy shores, where the salt water overflows: it is a strong purge, and, as such, is often used in medicine. The fourth sort is common in the hot parts of America; and is planted to cure a colic and fevers: one of these plants will grow to the length of sixty or an hundred feet, and produce great quantities of side branches, and large fragrant yellow flowers, succeeded by three large angular seeds. The two kinds of potatoes are much cultivated in the West Indies, for food; and, from the roots, a drink is made, called bindweed, stronger or weaker: it is a spiritous liquor, but not sufficient to fly into the head; nor will it keep beyond four or five days. These roots have been brought from America, and are cultivated in Spain and Portugal; but, in general, they are not so well liked as the common potato, being too sweet and poisonous. The jalap, whose root has been long used in medicine, is a native of the province of Ixtapa, about two days journey from La Vera Cruz. Milner.

Bindweed is of two sorts, the larger and the smaller; the first sort flowers in September, and the last in June and July. Mortimer.

B'NDL' n. f. [from binus and oculus.] A kind of dioptric telescope, fitted to with two tubes joining together in one, so that a distant object may be seen with both eyes together. Harris.

B'NDULAR. adj. [from binus and oculus, Lat.] Having two eyes.

Most animals are binocular, spiders for the most part octo-ocular, and some fennular.

B'NDIAL. Rest. [in algebra.] A root composed of only two parts or members, connected with the signs plus or minus. Harris.

B'NDINOUS. adj. [from binus and nomen, Lat.] Having two names.

B'NDGRAPH. n. f. [from binus and γραφω.] A writer of lives; a relator not of the history of nations, but of the actions of particular persons.

Our Grubstreet biographers watch for the death of a great man, like so many undertakers, on purpose to make a penny of him. Addison.

B'NDGRAPHY. n. f. [from binus and γραφω.] In writing the lives of men, which is called biography, some authors place every thing in the precise order of time when it occurred. Watts.

B'NDVAC. n. f. [Fr. from ver vac, a double guard, Germ. B'NDVAC, in war.] A guard at night performed by the whole army; which, either as a liege, or lying before an enemy, every evening draws out from its tents or huts, and continues all night in arms before its lines or camp, to prevent any surprise. To raise the bivouac, is to return the army to their tents at break of day. Treux. Harris.

B'NDAROUS.

BIPAROUS, adj. [from bis and paris, Lat.] Bringing forth two at a birth.

BIPARTITE, [from bis and partis, Lat.] Having two corresponding parts; divided into two.

BIPARTITION, n. f. [from bipartite, Lat.] The act of dividing into two; or of making two corresponding parts.

BIPED, n. f. [bipes, Lat.] An animal with two feet. No serpent, or fishes oviparous, have any bones at all; neither biped nor quadruped oviparous, have any exteriorly.

BIPEDAL, adj. [bipedalis, Lat.] Two feet in length; or having two feet.

BIPENNATED, adj. [from bis and penna, Lat.] Having two wings.

All bipennated insects have poises joined to the body.

BIPYCNALOUS, adj. [of bis, Lat. and pycnos, Gr.] A flower consisting of two leaves. Derham's Physic theol.

BISQUADRATE, n. f. [in algebra.] The fourth power, arising from the multiplication of a square number, or quantity by itself. Dict.

BIRCH TRE, [birch, Sax. betula, Lat.]

The leaves are like those of the pl plant; the shoots are very slender and weak; the catkins are produced at remote distances from the fruits, on the same tree; the fruit becomes a little squamose cone; the seeds are winged, and the tree calls its own red every year. This tree is propagated by suckers, which may be transplanted either in October or February; it delights in a poor soil. The timber of this tree is used to make chairs, &c. It is also planted for hop poles, hoops, &c. and it is often used to make brooms. Miller.

BIRCHEN, adj. [from birch.] Made of birch.

His beaver'd brow a birchen garland bears. Dunsin.
BIRD, n. f. [bird, or brub, a chicken, Saxon.] A general term for the feathered kind; a fowl. In common talk, fowl is used for the larger, and bird for the smaller kind of feathered animals.

The poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl. Macbeth.
Sh' had all the regal makings of a queen;
As holy oil, Edward confessor's crown,
The rod and bird of peace, and all such emblems,
Laid nobly on her. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
The bird of Jove floop'd from his airy tour,
Two birds of gayest plum before him drove.

Milton's Paradise Lost.
Hence men and beasts the breath of life obtain,
And birds of air, and monsters of the main. Dunsin's A. n.
There are some birds that are inhabitants of the water whose blood is cold as fishes, and their flesh is so like in taste, that the scrupulous are allowed them on fish days. Lake.

Some squire perhaps you take delight to rack;
Who visits with a gun, presents with birds. Pope.

BIRD, n. f. [from the noun.] To catch birds.
I do invite you tomorrow morning to my house, to breakfast;
after, we'll a birding together. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

BIRDSHOT, n. f. [from bird and shot, or arrow.] A small shot, or arrow, to be shot at birds.

To be generous, gentle, and of free disposition, is to take those things for birdshot, that you deem cannon bullets.

BIRDCAGE, n. f. [from bird and cage. See CAGE.]
Birds are taught him the pulley, and tops the centrifugal force.

BIRDCATCHER, n. f. [from bird and catch.] One that makes it his employment to take birds.

A poor lark entered into a miserable expostulation with a birdcatcher, that had taken her in his net. L'Estrange.

BIRDER, n. f. [from bird.] A birdcatcher.

I creep up into the chimney — There they always use to discharge their birding-pieces; creep into the kill hole.

BIRDLIME, n. f. [from bird and lime.] A glutinous substance, which is spread upon twigs, by which the birds that light upon them are entangled.

Birdlime is made of the bark of holly, boiled for ten or twelve hours; and when the green coat is separated from the other, they cover it up for a fortnight, in a moist place, and pound it into a tough paste, that no fibres of the wood be left; then it is walked in a running stream, till no motes appear, and put up to ferment for four or five days, and skummed as often as any thing arises, and then hid up for use; at which time they incorporate with it a third part of nut oil, over the fire. The birdlime brought from Damascus is supposed to be made of scabious, the kernels being frequently found in it; but this will not endure the frost or wet. That brought from Spain is of an ill smell, but the bark of our lantane, or wayfaring shrub, will make very good birdlime. Chambers.

Nº XV.

Holly is of so viscous a juice, as they make birdlime of the bark of it. Becon's Natural History.

With flowers of gather'd glue, contrive
To stop the vents and crannies of their hive;
Not birdlime, or lean pitch, produce
A more tenacious mass of clammy juice. Dryden's Virgil.

I'm ensnar'd;
Heav'n's birdlime wraps me round, and glues my wings. Dryden's King Arthur.

The woodpecker, and other birds of this kind, because they prey upon flies which they catch with their tongue, have a couple of bags filled with a viscous humour, as if it were a natural birdlime, or liquid glue.

BIRDMAN, n. f. [from bird and man.] A birdcatcher; a fowler. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

As a fowler was bending his net, a blackbird asked him what he was doing; why, says he, I am laying the foundations of a city; and so the birdman drew out of sight. L'Estrange.

BIRDSEY, n. f. [Adonis, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The leaves are like fennel of ch-momile; the flowers consist of many leaves, which are expanded in form of a rose; the seeds are collected into oblong heads. The species are, 1. The common red birds eye. 2. The long leaved yellow birds eye, &c. The first sort is sown in open borders, as an annual flower plant. The yellow sort is uncommon in England. Miller.

BIRDSFOOT, [ernithopodium, Lat.] The name of a plant.

It has a papilionaceous flower; the ovary, which rises out of the flower cup, afterwards becomes a pod, sometimes distinguished into bells by transverse partitions, full of seeds, for the most part roundish; the leaves grow by threes, but have two wings, or little leaves, at the origin of their foot stalks. The species are, 1. The tallest hairy birdsfoot trefail, with a glomerated flower. 2. Upright hairy birdsfoot trefail, &c. The first of these plants is, by some, supposed to be the cyllus of Virgil; it dies to the ground with every winter, and rises again the succeeding spring; and, when the roots are strong, the shoots will rise to four or five feet high, and produce flowers in great plenty; if it be cut while young, the cows are very fond of it, but horses will not eat it, unless they are very hungry. Miller.

BIRK, n. f. [birch, Sax.]

1. The act of coming into life.
But thou art fair and at thy birth, dear boy,
Nature and fortune join'd to make thee great. Shakspeare's K. J.
In Spain, our springs like old men children be,
Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy;
No kindly showers fall on our barren earth,
To hatch the seasons in a timely birth. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

2. Extraction; lineage.
Most virtuous virgin, born of heav'nly birth. Fairy Q.
All truth I shall relate: not first can I Myself to be of Grecian birth deny. Sir J. Denham.

3. Rank which is inherited by descent.
He doth object, I am too great of birth.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
Be just in all you say, and all you do;
Whatever be your birth, you're sure to be
A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden's Juvenal.

4. The condition or circumstances in which any man is born.
High in his chariot then Halesus came,
A foe by birth to Troy's unhappy name. Dryden's Virgil.

5. Thing born; production.
The people fear me; for they do observe Unfather'd heirs and loathly birth of nature. Shakspeare's H. IV.

That poets are far rarer births than kings,
Your noblest father prov'd. Bacon's Epigrams.

Who of themselves
Abhor to join; and, by imprudence mix'd,
Produce prodigious births, of body, or mind.

Milton's Paradise Lost.
She, for this many thousand years,
Seems to have practis'd with much care,
To frame the race of woman fair;
Yet never could a perfect birth
Produce before, to grace the earth. Waller.

His eldest birth
Flies, mark'd by heav'n, a fugitive o'er earth. Prior.

The valleys smile, and, with their flow'ry face,
And wealthy births, confess the flood's embrace. Blackmore.

Others hatch their eggs, and tend the birth, till it is able to shift for itself. Addison's Spectator.

6. The act of bringing forth.
That fair Syrian shepherdess,
Who after years of barrenness,
The highly favour'd Joseph bore
To him that serv'd for her before;

- And at her next birth, much like thee,
Through pangs fled to felicity. Milton.
7. The seamen call a due or proper distance between ships lying at an anchor, or under sail, a birth. Also the proper place aboard for the men to put their chests, &c. is called the birth of that mess. - Also a convenient place to moor a ship in, is called a birth. Harris.

BIRTHDAY. n. f. [from birth and day.]

1. The day on which any one is born.
Orient light,
Exhaling first from darkness, they beheld Birthdays of heaven and earth. Milton's Paradise Lost.
2. The day of the year in which any one was born, annually observed.

This is my birthday; as tis this very day
Was Caesar born. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

They tell me, 'tis my birth-day, and I'll keep it
With double pomp of feasts:
'Tis what the day deserves, which gave me birth. Dryden.

Whose cloaths returning it they claim, Prior.

BIRTHDOM. n. f. [This is erroneously, I think, printed in Shakespeare's birthdom. It is derived from birth and dom. See DOM; as kingdom, duedom.] Privileg of birth.

Let us rather
Hold fast the mortal sword; and, like good men, Beside our downy birthdom. Shakespeare's Much to.

BIRTHRIGHT. n. f. [from birth and right.]
1. The night in which any one is born.

'Th' angelic song in Bethlehem field,
On thy birth-night, that sung the Saviour born. Percy's Regain.

2. The night annually kept in memory of any one's birth.
A youth more glut'ring than a birth-night beau. Pope.

BIRTHPLACE. n. f. [from birth and place.] Place where any one is born.

My birthplace have I and my lovers left;
This enemy's town I'll enter. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

A degree of stupidity beyond even what we have been ever charged with, upon the score of our birthplace and climate. Swift's Address to Parliament.

BIRTHRIGHT. n. f. [from birth and right.] The rights and privileges to which a man is born; the right of the first born.

Thy blood and virtue
Contend for empire in thee, and thy goodness
Shares with thy birthright. Shakespeare's A's w. b. that ends well.

And hath been found
By merit, more than birthright. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I lov'd her first, I cannot quit the claim,
But will preserve the birthright of my passion. Orway's Orpl.

While on batens in this breast I find,
I have not lost the birthright of my mind. Dryden's Aureng-z.

To say, that liberty and property are the birthright of the English nation, but that if a prince invades them by illegal methods, we must upon no pretence resist, is to confound governments. And son's 17th Exampl.

BIRTHSTRANGLER. adj. [from birth and strangle.] Strangled or suffocated in being born.

Finger of birthstrangled babe, Ditch deliver'd by a drab. Shakespeare's Much to.

BIRTHWORT. n. f. [from birth and wort; I suppose from a quality of hastening delivery. Arystachia, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The stalks are flexible; the leaves are placed alternately on the branches; the flowers consist of one leaf, are of an anomalous figure, hollowed like a pipe, and shaped like a tongue, generally hooked; the flower cup turns to a membranaceous, oval shaped fruit, divided into five cells, and full of flat seeds.

The species are, 1. The round rooted birthwort. 2. The climbing birthwort. 3. Spanish birthwort, &c. The first and second are sometimes used in medicine, and are easily propagated by parting their roots. Ait.

BISCUIT. n. f. [from bis, twice, Lat. and cuit, baked, Fr.] 1. A kind of hard dry bread, made to be carried to sea; it is baked for long voyages four times.

The biscuit also in the ships, especially in the Spanish gallees, was grown hoary, and unwholesome.

Many have been cured by abstinence from drink, eating dry biscuit, which creates no thirst, and strong fictions four or five times a day. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. A composition of fine flour, almonds, and sugar, made by the confectioners.

TO BISECT. v. a. [from bis and sec, to cut, Lat.] To divide into two parts.

The rational horizon bisecteth the globe into two equal parts. Brown's Vulgar Error.

BISECTION. n. f. [from the verb.] A geometrical term, signifying the division of any quantity into two equal parts.

BISHOP. n. f. [from episcopus, Lat. the Saxons formed bycep, which was afterwards softened into bishop.] One of the head order of the clergy.

A bishop is an overseer, or superintendent, of religious matters in the Christian church. Byss's Porteng.

You shall find him well accompany'd
With reverend fathers, and well learned bishops.

Their zealous superstition thinks, or pretends, they cannot do God a greater service, than to destroy the primitive, apostolical, and anciently universal government of the church by bishops. K. Charles.

In case a bishop should commit treason and felony, and forfeit his estate, with his life, the lands of his bishoprick remain still in the church. Scot.

On the word bishop, in French evêque, I would observe, that there is no natural connexion between the sacred office and the letters or sound; for evêque, and bishop, signify the same office, though there is not one letter alike in them. Walt's Logic.

BISHOP. n. f. A cant word for a mixture of wine, oranges, and sugar.

Five oranges,
Well roasted, with sugar and wine in a cup,
They'll make a sweet bishop, when gentle folks sup. Swift.

They are prophane, imperfect, ch too bad,
Except confirm'd and bishoped by thee. Dorne.

BISHOP-ACK. n. f. [bycypocrite, Saxon.] The diocese of a bishop; the district over which the jurisdiction of a bishop extends.

It will be fit, that, by the king's supreme power in causes ecclesiastical, they be subordinate under frow bishop, and bishoprick, of this realm. Lucan's Advice to a B.

A virtuous woman should reject marriage, as a good man does a bishoprick; but I would advise neither to persist in refusing. Addison's Spectator.

Those pastors had episcopal ordination, posited preferment in the church, and were sometimes promoted to bishopricks themselves. Swift in the Sentiments of a Church of E. man.

BISHOPSWOOD. Azara, 1st. The name of a plant.

This is an unbellicuous weed, with small bristled seeds; the petals of the flowers are unequal, and shaped like a heart. The seeds of the greater bishopwood are used in medicine, and should be sown in an open situation, early in the spring. Milner.

BISK. n. f. [bysser, Fr.] Soup; broth made by boiling several sorts of fish.

A prince, who in a forest rides astray,
And, weary, to some cottage finds the way,
Talks of no pyramid, or fowls, or bisks of fish,
But hungry laps his cream serv'd up in earthen dish. King's Art of Galery.

BISKET. See B. SCURT.

BISMUTH. n. f. The same as arsenicite; it properly signifies a hard, white, brittle, mineral substance, of a metallic nature, found at Misnia; though supposed to be only a recentitious matter thrown off in the formation of tin, as unfit to enter its composition. There are some, however, who esteem it a metal in se, though it usually contains some silver. There is an artificial bismuth made, for the shops, of tin.

BISSEXTILE. n. f. [from bis and sextus, Lat.] Leap year; the year in which the day, arising from six odd hours in each year, is intercalated.

The year of the sun consisteth of three hundred and sixty five days and six hours, wanting eleven minutes; which six hours omitted, will, in time, deprave the compute; and this was the occasion of bissextile or leap year.

Towards the latter end of February is the bissextile or intercalary day; call'd bissextile, because the sixth of the calends of March is twice repeated. Hower on Time.

BISSON. [derived by Skinner from by and sin.] Blind.

But why, old! who has seen the mobbed queen,
Run barefoot up and down, threatening the flames
With bisson rheum? Shakespeare's Hamlet.

What harm can your bisson conspicuities glean out of this character. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

BISTRE. n. f. [French.] A colour made of chimney foot boiled, and then diluted with water; used by painters in washing their designs. Trevor.

That rigid score. Milton.
3. Sharply; severely.

His behaviour is not to censure bitterly the errors of their zeal. Spratt.

BITTERN. n. f. [bucara, Fr.] A bird with long legs, and a long bill, which feeds upon fish; remarkable for the noise which he makes, usually called lumping. See BITTICUR.

The poor fish have enemies enough, besides such unnatural fishermen as osiers, the cormorant, and the bittern. Walton.

So that scarce
The bittern knows his time, with bill ingulph't,
To flake the founding marsh. Thompson.

BITTERN. n. f. [from bitter.] A very bitter liquor, which drains off in making of common salt, and used in the preparation of Epsom salt. Quincy.

BITTERNESS. n. f. [from bitter.]

1. A bitter taste.
The idea of whiteness, or bitterness, is in the mind, exactly answering that power which is in any body to produce it there. Locke.

2. Malice; grudge; hatred; implacability.
The bitterness and animosity between the chief commanders was such, that a great part of the army was marched. Clarendon.

3. Sharpness; severity of temper.
His sorrows have so overwhelm'd his wits,
Shall we be thus afflicted in his wrecks,
His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterness? Shakspeare.
His point and Crew appear'd now to have contracted more bitterness and frowns than formerly, and were more relieved towards the king's commissioners. Clarendon.

4. Satire; piquancy; keenness of reproach.
Some think their wits have been asleep, except they dart out somewhat piquant, and to the quick: men ought to find the difference between falsetts and bitterness. Bacon.

5. Sorrow; vexation; affliction.
There appears much joy in him, even so much, that joy could not flow itself modest enough, without a badge of bitterness. Shakspeare.

They shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and still be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his firstborn. Zach.

Must pursue the pleasures, as they call them, of their natures, which begin in sin, are carried on with danger, and end in bitterness. Wale.

I oft, in bitterness, of soul, deplor'd
My absent daughter, and my dearest lord. Pope.
BITTERSWEET. n. f. [from bitter and sweet] The name of an apple, which has a compound taste of sweet and bitter.

It is but a bittersweet at best, and the fine colours of the serpent do by no means make amends for the smart and poison of his sting. South.

When I express the taste of an apple, which we call the bittersweet, none can mistake what I mean. Watts.
BITTERVETCH. n. f. [orobus, Lat.]

This plant hath a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empanclement rises the pointal, wrapt up in the membrane, which becomes a round pod, full of oval shaped seeds; two leaves, joined together, grow upon a rib that terminates in a point. Miller.

BITEYOUR. n. f. [bu'evr, Fr.] The name of a bird, commonly called the bittern; [see BITTERN.] but perhaps as properly bittour.

Then to the waters brink the laid her head;
And, as a bittour bumps within a reed,
To dice alone, O lake, she said, I tell. Dryden.

BITUMEN. n. f. [from bitumen.] Bitumen. See BITUMEN.

Mix with these
Idæan pitch, quick sulphur, silver's spume,
Sea onion, bellebore, and black bitume. Mary.

BITUMEN. n. f. [Lat.] A fat unctuous matter dug out of the earth, or scummed off lakes, as the Asphaltis in Judea, of various kinds; some so hard as to be used for coals; others so glutinous as to serve for mortar. Savary.

It is reported, that bitumen mingled with lime, and put under water, will make as it were an artificial rock, the substance becoming so hard. Bacon.

The fabrick seem'd a work of rising ground,
With sulphur and bitumen cast between. Dryden.
Bitumen is a body that readily takes fire, yields an oil, and is soluble in water. Woodward.

BITUMINOUS. adj. [from bitumen.] Having the nature and qualities of bitumen; compounded of bitumen.

Naphtha, which was the bituminous mortar used in the walls of Babylon, grows to an entire and very hard matter, like a stone. Bacon.

The fruitage fair to fight, like that which grew Near that bituminous lake, where Sodom flay'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

BITALVE. adj. [from bimus and valve, Lat.] Having two valves or shutters; a term used of those fish that have two shells, as oysters; and of those plants whose feed pods open their whole length, to discharge their seeds, as peas.

In the cavity lies loose the shell of some sort of bivalve, larger than could be introduced in at either of those holes. Woodward.

BIVALVULA. adj. [from bivalve.] Having two valves. Dill.
BIXWORT. n. f. An herb. Dill.

BIZANTINE. n. f. [more properly spelt byzantine; from Byzantium.] A great piece of gold valued at fifteen pound, which the king offered upon high festival days; it is yet called a byzantine, which anciently was a piece of gold coined by the emperours of Constantinople. C Camden.

TO BLAB. v. a. [habberen, Dutch.]

1. To tell what ought to be kept secret; it usually implies rather thoughtlessness than treachery; but may be used in either sense.
The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day,
Is crept into the bosom of the sea. Shakspeare.

Thy dues be done, and none left out,
Ere the blabbing eastern cock,
The nice morn on the Indian steep,

I rom her cabin'd loophole peep.
Nature has made man's breast no windores,
To publish what he does within doors;
Nor what dark secrets there inhabit,
Unless his own rail folly blab it. Milton.

Sorrow nor joy can be disguis'd by art,
Our foreheads blab the secrets of our heart. Hudibras.

It is unlawful to give any kind of religious worship to a creature; but the very indices of the fathers cannot escape the index ex u garrins, for blabbing to great a truth. Dryden.

Nor whisper to the tattling reeds
The blackell of all female deeds
Nor blab it on the lonely rocks,
Where echo sits, and fill'ning mocks. Stillingfleet.

2. To tell; in a good sense.
That delightful engine of her thoughts,
That blab'd them with such pleasing eloquence,
Is torn from forth that pretty hallow cage. Swift.

TO BLAB. v. n. To tattle; to tell tales. Shakspeare. Titus Andronicus.

Your mouth I'll be;
When my tongue blabs, then let mine eyes not see. Shakspeare. Twelfth Night.

BLAB. n. f. [from the verb.] A tattle; a thoughtless babble; a treacherous betrayal of secrets.

The secret man heareth many confessions; for who will open himself to a blab, or babble? Bacon.

To have reveal'd
Secrets of man, the secrets of a friend,
Contempt and scorn of all, to be excluded
All friendship, and avoided as a blab. Milton.

Whoever shews me a very inquisitive body, I'll shew him a blab; and one that shall make privacy as publick as a proclamation. LeStrange.

I should have certainly gone about shewing my friends, under the charge of secrecy, to every blab of my acquaintance. Swift's Letters.

BLABBER. n. f. [from blab.] A tattle; a tattle.
TO BLABBER. v. n. To whistle to a horse. Stinner.

BLABBERLIPPED. Stinner. See BLOBBERLIPPED.
BLACK. adj. [black, Saxon.]

1. Of the colour of night.
In the twilight in the evening, in the black and dark night. Prev.

By Aristotle it seems to be implied, in these problems which enquire why the sun makes man black, and not the fire, why it whitens wax, yet blacks the skin. Brown.

That little cloud that appear'd at first to Elijah's servant, no bigger than a man's hand, but presently after grew, and spread, and blackened the face of the whole heaven. South.

3. To defame; or make infamous.

Let us blacken him what we can, said that miscreant Harpion, of the blessed king, upon the writings and drawing up his charge against his approaching trial. South.

The morals blacken'd, when the writings 'scape

The libell'd person, and the pictur'd shape. Pope.

7. BLACKEN. v. n. To grow black.

The hollow sound

Sung in the leaves, the forest shook around,

Air blacken'd, roll'd the thunder, groan'd the ground. Dryden.

BLACKENISH. adj. [from black.] Somewhat black.

Part of it all the year continues in the form of a blackish

oil. Boyle.

BLACKMOOR. n. f. [from black and Moor.] A negro.

The land of Chus makes no part of Africa; nor is it the habitation of blackmoors; but the country of Arabia, especially the happy and stony. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

More to weft

The realm of blackness to the blackmoor sea. Par. Reg.

BLACKNESS. n. f. [from black.]

1. Black colour.

Blackness is only a disposition to absorb, or hide, without reflection, most of the rays of every sort that fall on the bodies. Locke.

There would emerge one or more very black spots, and, within those, other spots of an interior blackness. Newton.

His tongue, his prating tongue, had chang'd him quite,
To foxy blackness from the purest white. Addison.

2. Darknes.

His faults in him seem as the spots of heaven;

More fiery by night's blackness. Shakespeare.

BLACKSMITH. n. f. [from black and smith.] A smith that works in iron; so called from being very smutty.

The blacksmith may forge what he pleases. Havel.

Shut up thy doors with bars and bolts; it will be impossible for the blacksmith to make them so fast, but a cat and a whore-master will find a way through them. Spettators.

BLACKTAIL. n. f. [from black and tail.] A fish; a kind of perch, by some called ruff, or pope. See Pope. Diet.

BLACKTHORN. n. f. [from black and thorn.] The same with the blue. See PLUM, of which it is a species.

BLADDER. n. f. [blabbe, Saxon; blader, Dutch.

1. That vessel in the body which contains the urine.

The bladder should be made of a membranous substance, and extremely dilatible for receiving and containing the urine, till an opportunity of emptying it. Rey.

2. It is often filled with wind, to which allusions are frequently made.

That huge great body which the giant bore,
Was vanquish'd quite, and of that monstrous mafs

A bladder but moderately filled with air, and strongly tied, being held near the fire, grew exceeding turgid and hard; but afterwards being brought nearer to the fire, it suddenly broke, with so loud a noise as made us for a while after almost deaf. Boyle.

3. It is usual for those that learn to swim, to support themselves with blown bladders.

I have ventur'd,

Like little wanton boys, that swim on bladders.

Their many summers, in a sea of glory;

But far beyond my depth: my highblown pride

At length broke under me. Shakespeare.

4. A bladder; a puffule.

BLADDER-NUT. n. f. [staphyleandra, Lat.] A plant.

The flower consists of several leaves, which are placed circularly, and expand in form of a rose; out of whose many headed flower cap rises the pointal, which becomes a membranous fruit, somewhat like the inflated bladder of fishes, and divided into two or three cells, containing seeds in form of a scull.

The species are, 1. The common wild bladder-nut. 2. Three leaved Virginian bladder-nut. 3. Bladder-nut, with single thinning leaves. 4. Bladder-nut, with narrow bay leaves. 5. Three leaved American bladder-nut, with cut leaves. The first of these trees is found wild in the woods, and other shady places, in the northern parts of England. The second sort is a native of America, but is so hardy as to endure the severest cold of our climate, in the open air. Both these kinds may be propagated, by sowing their seeds early in the spring. They will commonly grow in England to the height of twelve or fourteen feet. Mill.

BLADDER-SNA. n. f. [colutea, Lat.] The name of a plant.

It hath a papilionaceous flower, succeeded by pods, resembling the inflated bladder of fishes, in which are contained several kidney shaped seeds. The species are five. These shrubs grow to the height of eight or ten feet; and, among flowering tree, the oddness of their flowers and pods will make a pretty variety.

BLADE, n. f. [blæs, blæs, Sax. blæd, Fr.] The spire of grass before it grows to seed; the green shoot of corn which rise from the seed. This seems to me the primitive signification of the word blade; from which, I believe, the blade of a sword was first named, because of its similitude in shape; and, from the blade of a sword, that of other weapons or tools.

There is hardly found a plant that yieldeth a red juice in the blade or ear, except it be the tree that beareth argentea dracunculus.

Sends in his feeding flocks betimes. 't invade
The rising bulk of the luxuriant blade. Dryden.
If we were able to dive into her secret recesses, we should find that the smallest blade of grass, or most contemptible weed has its particular use. Swift.

Hung on every spray, on every blade
Of grass, the myriad dewdrops twinkle round. Thomson.

BLADE, n. f. [blatte, Ger. blatt, Dutch.]

1. The sharp or striking part of a weapon or instrument, distinct from the handle. It is usually taken for a weapon, and so called probably from the likeness of a sword blade to a blade of grass.

He fought all round about, his thirty blade
To bathe in blood of faithful enemy. Fairy Queen.

She knew the virtue of her blade, nor would Pollute her fame with impious blood. Dryden.

Be his this sword, whose blade of brass displays
A ruddy gleam; whose hilt a silver blade. Pope.

2. A brief man, either fierce or gay, called for in contempt. So we say accuse his courage.

You'll find yourself mistaken, sir, if you'll take upon you to judge of these blades by their garb, looks, and outward appearance. L'Estrange.

Then turning about to the hangman, he said,
Dispatch me, I prithee, this trouble some blade. Prior.

BLADE OF THE SHOULDER, n. f. The bone called by anatomists BLADERON.

He fell most furiously on the boisterous relics of a shoulder of mutton, commonly called a bladebone. Pope.

TO BLADE, v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish, or fit with a blade.

BLADE, adj. [from blade.] Having blades or spires.

Her silver visage in the wat'ry glass,
Decking with liquid pearl the bladed glass.
Shakspeare, Midsummer Night's Dream.

As where the lightning runs along the ground,
Nor bladed grass, nor bearded corn succeeds,
But scales of scurf and putrefaction breeds. Dryden.

BLAIN, n. f. [blægen, Sax. blæne, Dutch.] A puitule; a boil; a blister.

Itches, blains,
Sow all th' Athenian bosoms, and the crop
Be general leprosy. Shakspeare.

Boresches and blains must all his flesh imbosh,
And all his people. Milton.

When'er I hear a rival nam'd,
I feel my body all inflam'd;
Which breaking out in boils and blains,
With yellow scum my linen stains. Swift.

BLAMABLE, adj. [from blame.] Culpable; faulty.

Virtue is placed between two extremes, which are on both sides equally blamable. Dryden.

BLAMABLENESS, n. f. [from blamable.] Fault; the state of being liable to blame.

BLAMABLY, adv. [from blamable.] Culpable; in a manner liable to censure.

A proceß may be carried on against a person, that is maliciously or blamably absent, even to a definitive sentence. Ayliffe.

TO BLAME, v. a. [blame, Fr.]

1. To censure; to charge with a fault; it generally implies a slight censure.

Our pow'r
Shall do a court'ry to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not controul. Shakspeare.

Porphyrius, you too far did tempt your fate;
'Tis true, your duty to me it became;
But praising that, I must your conduct blame.
Dryden's Tyrannick Love.

Each finding, like a friend,
Something to blame, and something to commend. Pope.

2. To blame has usually the particle for before the fault.

The reader must not blame me for making use here all along of the word sentiment. Lacks.

3. Sometimes, but rarely, of.
'Tomorrow he blam'd of inconsiderate rashness, for that he would busy himself in matters not belonging to his vocation. Knutler's History of the Turks.

BLAME, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Fault; imputation of a fault.

In arms, the praise of success is shared among many; yet the blame of misadventures is charged upon one. Sir J. Hayward.

They lay the blame on the poor little ones, sometimes passionately enough, to divert it from themselves. Lacks.

2. Crime; that which produces or deserves censure.

Who would not judge us to be discharged of all blame, which are confess to have no great fault, even by their very word and testimony, in whose eyes no fault of ours hath ever hitherto been accustomed to seem small. Hobbs.

I unspeak mine own detraction; here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. Shakspeare.

3. Hurt.
Therewith upon his crest,
With rigour so outrageous he smit,
That a large share it blow'd out of the rest,
And glancing down his shield, from blame him fairly blest. Fairy Queen.

4. There is a peculiar structure of this word, in which it is not very evident whether it be a noun or a verb; but I conceive it to be the noun. To blame, in French, a verb.

You were to blame, I must be plain with you,
To part too lightly with your wife's first gift. Shakspeare.

I do not ask whether they were mistaken; but, on supposition they were not, whether they were to blame in the manner. Stillington.

Now we should hold them much to blame,
If they went back before they came. Prior.

BLAMERFUL, adj. [from blame and full.] Criminal; guilty; meriting blame.

Is not the cause of these timeless deaths
As blameful as the executioner?
Bluntwitted lord, ignoble in demeanor,
If ever lady wrong'd her lord so much,
Thy mother took into her blamful bed
Some stern untutor'd churl. Shakspeare.

BLAMIBLES, adj. [from blame.]

1. Guiltless; innocent; exempt from censure or blame.

She found out the righteous, and preserved him blamible unto God. Wisdom, x. 5.

The flames ascend on either altar clear,
While thus the blameless maid address'd her pray'r. Dryden.

Such a lessening of our coin will deprive great numbers of blameless men of a fifth part of their estates. Lacks.

2. Sometimes it is used with of.
We will be blameless of of this thine oath. Job, ii. 17.

BLAMELESSLY, adv. [from blameless.] Innocently; without crime.

It is the wilful opposing explicit articles, and not the not believing them when not revealed, or not with that conviction, against which he cannot blamelessly, without pertinacity, hold out, that will bring danger of ruin on any. Hammind.

BLAMELESSNESS, n. f. [from blameless.] Innocence; exemption from censure.

Having resolved, with him in Homer, that all is chargeable on Jupiter and fate, they inter, with him, the blameless of the inferior agent. Hammind.

BLAMER, n. f. [from blame.] One that blames or finds fault; a censurer.

In me you've hallowed a pagan muse,
And denounc'd a stranger, who, mistaught
By blamers of the times they marr'd, hath sought Virtues in corners. Doune.

BLAMENESS, adj. [from blame and worthy.] Culpable; blamable; worthy of blame or censure.

Although the same should be blameworthy, yet this she hath reasonably well forborn to incur the danger of any such blame. Hobbs.

TO BLANCH, v. a. [blanchir, Fr.]

1. To whiten; to change from some other colour to white.

 God in impious and irreverent terms.

Who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious. 1 Timothy.

Even that blasphemer himself would inwardly reverence him, as he in his heart really despises him for his cowardly base silence. Scots.

Deny the curst blasphemer's tongue to rage,
 And turn God's fury from an impious age. Tickell.

Should each blasphemer quite escape the rod,
 Because the insult's not to man, but God. Pope.

BLASPHEMOUS. adj. [from blaspheme.] It is usually spoken with the accent on the first syllable, but used by Aldrich with it on the second.] Impiously irreverent with regard to God.

O man, take heed how thou the gods do move,
 To cause full wrath, which thou canst not resist;
Blasphemous words the speaker vain do prove. Sidney.

And dar'st thou to the Son of God propound,
 To worship thee accurst; now more accurst
 For this attempt, bolder than that on Eve,
 And more blasphemous? Milton.

A man can hardly pass the streets, without having his ears grated with such horrid and blasphemous oaths and curses. Tillotson.

That any thing that wears the name of a christian, or but of man,

man, should venture to own such a villainous, impudent, and blasphemous assertion in the face of the world, as this! South. BLASPHEMOUSLY. adv. [from blasphem.] Impiously; with wicked irreverence.

Where is the right use of his reason, while he would blasphemously set up to controul the commands of the Almighty? Swift. BLASPHEMY. n. f. [from blasphem.]

Blasphemy, strictly and properly, is an offering of some indignity, or injury, unto God himself, either by words or writing.

But that my heart's on future mischief fet,
I would speak blasphem, ere bid you fly;
But fly you must, Shakespeare.

Intrinsic goodness consists in accordance, and in contrariety, to the secret will of God; or else God could not be defined good, so far as his thoughts and secrets, but only superficially good, as far as he is pleased to reveal himself, which is perfect blaspemy to imagine. Hammond.

BLAST. n. f. [from blaze, Sax. blasen, Germ. to blow.]

1. A gulf, or puff of wind.
They that stand high, have many blasts to shake them;
And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces. Shakespeare. Richard III.

Welcome, then,
Thou unsubstantial air, that I embrace;
The wretch that thou hast blown unto the world,
Owes nothing to thy blasts. Shakespeare.

Perhaps thy fortune doth controul the winds,
Doth loose or bind their blasts in secret cave. Fairfax.
Three ships were hurry'd by the southern blast,

2. The sound made by blowing any instrument of wind music.

head almost to the nose. Farris's Dict.

TO BLAZE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To flame; to shew the light of the flame.

Thus you may long live an happy instrument for your king and country; you shall not be a meteor, or a blazing star, but stella fixa; happy here, and more happy hereafter. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

The third fair morn now blaz'd upon the main,
Then glossy smooth lay all the liquid plain. Pope.

2. To be conspicuous.

TO BLAZE. v. a.

1. To publish; to make known; to spread far and wide.
The noise of this fight, and issue thereof, being blazed by the country people to some noblemen thereabouts, they came thither. Sidney.

My words, in hopes to blaze a steadfast mind,
This marble chose, as of like temper known. Sidney.
Thou shalt live, till we can find a time
To blaze your marriage, reconcile your friends,
Beg pardon of thy prince, and call thee back. Shakespeare's Romeo and Ju'ud.

When beggars die, there are no comets seen;
The heav'n's themselves blaze forth the death of princes. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

But he went out, and began to publish it much, and to

Such much worthiest were to blaze
The peerless height of her immortal praise,
Whole lustre leads us. Milton.

Far beyond
The sons of Anak, famous now and blaz'd, Feastful of danger, like a petty god,
I walk'd about. Milton.

Whose follies, blaz'd about, to all are known,
And are a secret to himself alone. Granville.

But, mortals, know, 'tis fill our greatest pride
To blaze those virtues, which the good would hide. Pope.

2. To blazon; to give an account of ensigns armorial in proper terms. 'His is not now used.

'This, in ancient times, was called a fierce; and you should then have blazed it thus: he bears a fierce, sable, between two fierces, or. Peaburn.

3. To inflame; to fire. This is not a proper use.
Pall'd thy blazed youth
Becomes assuag'd, and doth beg the alms
Of palsied eld. Shakespeare.

BLAZER. n. f. [from blaze.] One that spreads reports.
Utterers of secrets he from thence debar'd,
Babblers of folly, and blazers of crime;
His larum-bell might loud and wide be heard,
When cause requir'd, but never out of time;
Early and late it rung, at evening and at prime. Spenser.

TO BLAZON. v. a. [blazoner, Fr.]

1. To explain, in proper terms, the figures on ensigns armorial:
King Edward gave to them the coat of arms, which I am not herald enough to blazon into English. Addison.

2. To deck; to embellish; to adorn.

Then blazon in dread smiles her hideous form;
So lightning glids the unrelenting storm. Garrick.

3. To display; to set to show.
O thou goddess,
Thou divine nature! how thyself thou blazon'st
In these two princely boys! they are as gentle
As zephyrs blowing below the violet,
Not wagging his forward head. Shakespeare.

4. To celebrate; to set out.

One that excels the quirk of blazoning pens,
And, in terrestrial vesture of creation,
Does bear all excellency. Shakespeare.

5. To blaze about; to make publick.

TO BLEACH. v. a. [bleichen, Germ.] To whiten; commonly to whiten by exposure to the open air.
When turtles tread, and rooks and daws;
And maidens bleach their summer smocks. Shakespeare. Love's Labour's Lost.

Should I not seek
The clemency of some more temperate clime,
To purge my gloom; and, by the sun refined,
Bask in his beams, and bleach me in the wind? Dryden.
For there are various penances enjoined;
And some are hung to bleach upon the wind;
Some plunged in waters. Dryden.

TO BLEACH. v. n. To grow white; to grow white in the open air.
The white sheet bleaching in the open field. Shakespeare.
On every nerve

The deadly winter freezes; shuts up course;

1. Dim with rheum or water; sore with rheum.
It is an ancient tradition, that blear eyes affect found eyes.
Bacon's Natural History.
It is no more in the power of calumny to blast the dignity of an honest man, than of the blear-eyed owl to cast scandal on the sun. L'Estrange.

His blear eyes ran in gutters to his chin;
His beard was flabbie, and his cheeks were thin. Dryden.
When thou shalt fee the blear-eyed fathers teach
Their sons this harsh and mouldy sort of speech. Dryden.

2. Dim; obscure in general; or that which makes dimness.
Thus I hurl
My dazling spells into the spongy air,
Of power to cheat the eye with blear illusion,
And give it false presentments. Milton.

TO BLEAR. v. a. [from the adjective.]
1. To make the eyes watery, or sore with rheum.
All tongues speak of him, and the blear'd lights
Are bespangled to see him. Shakespeare.

The Dardanian wives,
With blear'd villages, come forth to view
Th' issue of th' exploit. Shakespeare.
When I was young, I, like a lazy fool,
Would blear my eyes with oil, to stay from school;
Atrike to pains. Dryden.

2. To dim the eyes.
N° XVI.

This may stand for a pretty superficial argument, to blear
our eyes, and lull us asleep in security. Raleigh.
BLEARINESS. n. f. [from blear.] The state of being bleared, or dimmed with rheum.

The defluxion falling upon the edges of the eyelids, makes a bleariness. Wijeman.
TO BLEAT. v. h. [blætan, Sax.] To cry as a sheep.
We were as twins'd lambs, that did frisk i' th' sun,
And bleat the one at th' other. Shakespeare.
You may as well use question with the wolf,
Why he hath made the ewe beat for the lamb.

Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
While on sweet grafs her eating charge does lie,
Our happy lover feeds upon her eye. Roscommon.
What bull dares bellow, or what sheep dares bleat
Within the lion's den? Dryden.

BLAIE, in counties.

TO BLEMISH. v. a. [from blème, Junius; from blème, white, Fr. Skinner.]

1. To mark with any deformity.
Like her that my outward face might have been disguised, than that the face of so excellent a mind could have been thus blemish'd. Stirling.

2. To detame; to tarnish, with respect to reputation.
Not that my virtue would blemish all the fair;
But yet if some be bad, 'tis wisdom to beware. Dryden.
Those, who, by concerted defamations, endeavour to blemish his character, incur the complicated guilt of slander and perjury. Addison.

BLEMISH. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A mark of deformity; a scar; a diminution of beauty.
As he hath caused a blemish in a man, so shall it be done to him again. Leviticus.

Open it such a distance off from the eyelid, that you divide not that; for, in so doing, you will leave a remediless blemish.
Wijeman's Surgery.

2. Reproach; disgrace; imputation.
Live thou, and to thy mother dead attest,
That clear the died from blemish criminal. Fairy Queen.

That you have been earnest, should be no blemish or discredit at all unto you. Hooker.
And if we shall neglect to propagate these blessed dispositions, what others can undertake it, without some blemish to us? some reflection on our negligence? Sparr.

None more industriously publish the blemishes of an extrordinary reputation, than such as lie open to the same censures; raising applause to themselves, for resembling a person of an exalted reputation, though in the blamable parts of his character. Addison.

3. A foil; turpitude; taint; deformity.
First shall virtue be vice, and beauty be counted a blemish, Ere that I leave with song of praise her praise to solemnize. Stirling.

Is conformity with Rome a blemish unto the church of England, and unto churches abroad an ornament? Hooker.

Not a hair perish'd:
On their sustaining garments not a blemish,
But fustier than before. Shakespeare.

Eveline's husband 'tis a fault
To love, a blemish to my thought. Waller.

That your duty may no blemish take,
I will myself your father's captive make. Dryden.

Such a mirth as this is capable of making a beauty, as well as a blemish, the subject of derision.
Addison.

The jade is returned as white, and as powdered, as if she had been at work in a bolting-house. I am.

BOLTSPIRIT n. f. A salt running out at the head of a ship, BOLTSPIRIT n. f. not standing upright, but asspe. The butt-end of it is generally set against the foot of the foremast; so that they are a stay to one another. The length with out board is sufficient to let its sails hang clear of all incumbrances. If the bolt fail in bad weather, the foremast cannot hold long after. See Dictionary.

Sometimes I'd divide,
And burn in many places; on the topmast,
The yards, and *bolt*spirit, would I flame distinctly. Shakespeare.

BOLUS n. f. [Bolos, Gr.] A form of medicine, in which the ingredients are made up into a soft mass, larger than pills, to be swallowed at once.

Keep their bodies soluble the while by clysters, lenitive boluses of cassia and manna, with scrap of viols. Hijeman.

By poets we are well assur'd;
That love, alas! can ne'er be cur'd;
A complicated heap of ills,
Despising boluses and pills. Swift.

BOMB n. f. [bombas, Lat.]
1. A loud noise.
There was an upper chamber, which being thought weak, was supported by a pillar of iron, of the bigness of one's arm in the middle; which, if you had struck, would make a little flat noise in the room, but a great bomb in the chamber beneath.
3 I

Bacon's Natural History.

2. A hollow iron ball, or shell, filled with gunpowder, and furnished with a vent for a fuse, or wooden tube, filled with combustible matter; to be thrown out from a mortar, which has its name from the noise it makes. The fuse, being set on fire, burns slowly till it reach the gunpowder, which goes off at once, hursting the shell to pieces with incredible violence; whence the use of bombs in besieging towns. The largest are about eighteen inches in diameter. By whom they were invented is not known, and the time is uncertain, some fixing it to 1588, and others to 1495.

Chambers.

The loud cannon misfire he pours,

Rewe.

And in the slaughter'ing bomb Gradivus roars,
To BOMB. v. a. [from the noun.] To fall upon with bombs; to bombard.

Our king thus trembles at Namur,

Whilst Villeroi, who ne'er afraid it,

To Bruxelles marches on secure,

To bomb the monks, and scare the ladies.

Prior.

BOMB-CHEST. n. f. [from bomb and chest.] A kind of chest filled usually with bombs, and sometimes only with gunpowder, placed under ground, to tear and blow it up in the air, with those who stand on it. They are now much disused.

Chambers.

BOMB-KETCH. n. f. A kind of ship, strongly built, to beat BOMB-VESSEL. n. f. the flock of a mortar, when bombs are to be fired into a town.

Genoa is not yet secure from a bombardment, though it is not so exposed as formerly.

Addison.

BO'MBASIN. n. f. [bombasin, Fr. from bombycinus, filken, Lat.] A flight filken stuff, for mourning.

BO'MBAST. n. f. [This word seems to be derived from Bombastus, one of the names of Paracelsus; a man remarkable for founding proficiencies, and unintelligible language.] Fustian; big words, without meaning.

Not polans motley tongue, soldiers bombast,
Mountbanks drug-tongue, nor the terms of law,
Are strong enough preparatives to draw
Me to hear this.

Donne.

Are all the flights of heroic poetry to be concluded bombast, unnatural, and mere madness, because they are not affected with their excellencies?

Dryden.

BO'MBAST. adj. [from the substantive.] High sounding; of big sound without meaning.

He, as loving his own pride and purpose,
Evades them with a bombast circumstance,
Horribly stuf'd with epithets of war.

Shakespeare.

BOMBILATION. n. f. [from bombu, Lat.] Sound; noise; report.

How to abate the vigour, or silence the bombilation of guns, a way is said to be by borax and butter, mixt in a due proportion, which will almost take off the report, and also the force of the charge.

Brown's 1st Agr. Essays.

O blessed bond of board and bed!

Shakespeare.

Love cools, brotherhood divide, and the bond is cracked 'twixt son and father.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

6. A writing of obligation to pay a sum, or perform a contract.

Go with me to a notary, seal me there
Your single bond.

Shakespeare.

What if I ne'er consent to make you mine;
My father's promise ties me not to time;
And bonds without a date, they say, are void.

Dryden.

7. Obligation; law by which any man is obliged.

Unhappy that I am! I cannot leave
My heart into my mouth: I love your majesty
According to my bond, no more nor less.

Shakespeare.

Take which you please, it dissolves the bonds of government and obedience.

Lact.

BOND. adj. [from bind, perhaps for bound; from gebunden, Saxon.] Captive; in a servile state.

Whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free.

1 Cor. xii. 13.

BONDAGE. n. f. [from bond.] Captivity; imprisonment; state of restraint.

You only have overthrown me, and in my bondage consist my glory.

Siding.

Say, gentle prince, would you not suppose
Your bondage happy, to be made a queen!—
—To be a queen in bondage, is more vile
Than is a slave in base servility.

Shakespeare.

Our cage

We make a choir, as those the prison'd bird,
And sing our bondage freely.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

He must resolve by no means to be enslaved, and brought under the bondage of observing oaths, which ought to vanish when they stand in competition with eating or drinking, or taking money.

Seneca.

The king, when he design'd my for my guard,
Resolv'd he would not make my bondage hard.

Dryden.

If she has a struggle for honour, she is in a bondage to love; which gives the story its turn that way.

Pope.

BO'NDMAID. n. f. [from bond, captive, and maid.] A woman slave.

Good sister, wrong me not, nor wrong yourself,
To make a bondmaid and a slave of me.

Shakespeare.

BO'NDMAN. n. f. [from bond and man.] A man slave.

Amongst the Romans, in making of a bondman free, was it not wondered wherefore so great ado should be made; the master to present his slave in some court, to take him by the hand, and not only to say, in the hearing of the public magistrate, I will that this man become free; but, after those solemn words uttered, to strike him on the cheek, to turn him round, the hair of his head to be shaved off, the magistrate to touch him thrice with a rod; in the end, a cap and a white garment given him.

Harlet.

O freedom! first delight of human kind;
Not that which bondmen from their masters find.

Dryden.

BONDIERVANT. n. f. [from bond and servant.] A slave; a servant without the liberty of quitting his master.

And if thy brother, that dwelleth by thee, be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bondservant.

Leviticus, xxx. 39.

My lords, the senators
Are sold for slaves, and their wives for bondswomen.

En. Jeune's Calisto.

BONE

BONE. n. f. [ban, Saxon.]

1. The solid parts of the body of an animal are made up of hard fibres, tied one to another by small transverse fibres, as those of the muscles. In a fetus they are porous, soft, and easily discerned. At their pores fill with a substance of their own nature, so they increase, harden, and grow close to one another. They are all spongy, and full of little cells, or are of a considerable firm thickness, with a large cavity, except the teeth; and where they are articulated, they are covered with a thin and strong membrane, called the periosteum. Each bone is much bigger at its extremity than in the middle, that the articulations might be firm, and the bones not easily put out of joint. But, because the middle of the bone should be strong, to sustain its allotted weight, and resist accidents, the fibres are there more closely compacted together, supporting one another; and the bone is made hollow, and consequently not so easily broken, as it must have been had it been solid and smaller.

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold. Shaksp.
There was lately a young gentleman bit to the bone. Tatler.
2. A fragment of meat; a bone with as much flesh as adheres to it.

Like AEsop's hounds, contending for the bone,
Each pleaded right, and would be lord alone. Dryden.

3. To be upon the bones. To attack.
Puis had a month's mind to be upon the bones of him, but was not willing to pick a quarrel. L'Estrange.

4. To make no bones. To make no scruple: a metaphor taken from a dog, who readily swallows meat that has no bones.

5. Bones. A sort of bobbins, made of trotter bones, for weaving bone-lace.

6. Bones. Dice.
But then my study was to cog the dice,
And dextrously to throw the lucky dice:
To flun amazement that swept my stakes away;
And watch the box, for fear they should convey False bones, and put upon me in the play. Dryden.

7. Bone. v. a. [from the noun.] To take out the bones from the flesh.

BONE-LACE. n. f. [from bone and lace; the bobbins with which lace is woven being frequently made of bones.] Flaxen lace, such as women wear on their linnen.

The things you follow, and make songs on now, should be best to knit, or sit down to bobbins or bone-lace. Tatler.
We destroy the symmetry of the human figure, and foolishly contrive to call off the eye from great and real beauties, to childish gewgaw ribbands and bone-lace. Spectator.

BONNET. adj. [from bone.] Without bones.

I would, while it was milking in my face,
Have plucked my nipple from his boneless gums,
And dash the brains out. Shaksp. King Lear.

7. Bone-set. v. n. [from bone and set.] To restore a bone out of joint to its place; or join a bone broken to the other part.

A fractured leg set in the country by one pretending to anatomy. Wifman's Surgery.

BONNETTER. n. f. [from bonnet.] A chirurgeon; or one who particularly professes the art of restoring broken or luxated bones.

At present my desire is only to have a good bonnetter. Denham's Sophy.

BONFIRE. n. f. [from bon, good, Fr. and fire.] A fire made for some publick cause of triumph or exultation.

Ring ye the bells to make it wear away,
And bonfire make all day. Spenser.

How came so many bonfires to be made in queen Mary's days? Why, the had abused and deceived her people. South.

Full soon by bonfire, and by bell,
We learnt our liege was passing well. Gay.

BONNET. n. f. [bonne grace, Fr.] A forehead-cloth, or covering for the forehead. Skinner.

I have seen her beset all over with emeralds and pearls, ranged in rows about her cawl, her peruke, her bonnet, and chaplet. Hutchinson's Providence.

BONNET. n. f. [bonnet, Fr.] A covering for the head; a hat; a cap.

Go to them with this bonnet in thy hand,
And thus far having stretch'd it, here be with them,
Thy knee bulging the frowns; for, in such businets, Action is eloquence. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

It was not probably the ceremony of veiling the bonnet in these salutations; for, in medals, they still have it on their heads. Addison.

BONNET. [In fortification.] A kind of little ravelin, without any ditch, having a parapet three feet high, anciently placed before the points of the salient angles of the glacis; being palisaded round: of late also used before the angles of bastions, and the points of ravelins.

BONNET a prefix, or prefix cap, is an outwork, having at the head three salient angles, and two inwards. It differs from the double tennille, because its sides, instead of being parallel, grow narrow at the gorge, and open wider at the front.

BO'NNETS. [In the sea language.] Small sails set on the courses on the mizzen, mainmast, and foremast of a ship, when these are too narrow or shallow to cloath the mast, or in order to make more way in calm weather. Cromb.

BO'NNILY. adv. [from bonny.] Gayly; handsomely; plumply.

BO'NNINESS. n. f. [from bonny.] Gayety; handsomeness; plumpness.

BO'NNY. adj. [from bon, bonny, Fr.] It is a word now almost confined to the Scottish dialect.]

1. Handsome; beautiful.

Match to match I have encounter'd him,
And made a prey for carrion kites and crows,
Ev'n of the bonny beast he lov'd so well. Shaksp.

Thus wail'd the louts in melancholy strain,
Till bonny Susan sped across the plain. Gay.

2. Gay; merry; frolicsome; cheerful; blithe.

Then high not so, but let them go, Shaksp.

And be you blithe and bonny.

It seems to be generally used in conversation for plump.

BONNY-CLABBER. n. f. A word used in some counties for four buttermilk.

We scorn, for want of talk, to jabber
Of parties o'er our bonny-clabber;
Not are we studious to enquire,
Who votes for manours, who for hire. Swift.

BONNY MAGNUM. n. f. See PLUM; of which it is a species.

BONY. adj. [from bone.]

1. Consisting of bones.

At the end of this hole is a membrane, fastened to a round long limb, and stretched like the head of a drum; and therefore, by anatomists, called tympanum. Ray.

2. Full of bones.

BO'BY. n. f. [a word of no certain etymology; Henham thinks it a corruption of bull-besf ridiculously; Skinner imagines it to be derived from baba, foolish, Span. Junius finds beshobard to be an old Scottish word for a coward, a contemptible fellow; from which he naturally deduces boby; but the original of beshobard is not known.] A dull, heavy, stupid fellow; a lubber.

But one exception to this fact we find,
That boby Phaon only was unkind,
An ill-bred boatman, rough as waves and wind. Prior.

Young muller next must live to fill him wine,
And starve himself to see the boby dine. King.

BOOK. n. f. [booc, Sax. supposed from boe, a beech; because t-y wrote on beech boards, as liber in Latin, from the rind of a tree.]

1. A volume in which we read or write:

See a host of prayer in his hand;
True ornaments to know a holy man. Shaksp.

Receive the sentence of the law for sins,
Such as by God's book are adjudg'd to death.

Shaksp. Henry IV.

But in the coffin that had the book, they were found as fresh as if they had been but newly written; being written on parchment, and covered over with warch candles of wax. Bacon.

Books are a sort of dumb teachers; they cannot answer sudden questions, or explain present doubts: this is properly the work of a living instructor. Watts.

2. A particular part of a work.

The first book we divide into sections; whereof the first is these chapters pass. Burnet's Theory.

3. The register in which a trader keeps an account of his debts.

This life

Prouder, than rustling in unpaid for silk:
Such gain the cap of him that makes them fine,
Yet keeps his book uncorrod'd. Shaksp.

4. In books. In kind remembrance.

I was so much in his book, that, at his decease, he left me the lamp by which he used to write his lucubrations. Addison.

5. Without book. By memory; by repetition; without reading. Sermons read they abhor in the church; but sermons without book, sermons which spend their life in their burls, and may have publick audience but once. Hooker.

TO BOOK. v. a. [from the noun.] To register in a book.

I beseech your grace, let it be book'd with the rest of this day's deeds; or I will have it in a particular ballad else, with mine own picture on the top of it. Shaksp.

He made wilful murder high treason; he caused the marchers to book their men, for whom they should make answer.

Davies on Ireland.

BOOK KEEPING. n. f. [from book and keep.] The art of keeping accounts, or recording the transactions of a man's affairs, in such a manner, that at any time he may thereby know the true state of the whole, or any part, of his affairs, with clearness and expedition. Warri.

BOOKENDER. n. f. [from book and bind.] A man whose profession it is to bind books.

BOOKFUL. adj. [from book and full.] Full of notions gleaned from books; crowded with undigested knowledge.

The booful blockhead, ignorantly read,
With loads of learned lumber in his head,
With his own tongue still clafies his ears,
And always lifting him to books; acquainted only
With books. It is generally ufed contemptuously.
I'll make him yield the crown,
Whole boofish rule hath pull'd fair England down.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.
I'm not boofish, yet I can read waiting-gentlemen in the Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

to another. Crusd.
2. It was used for any payment.
- BOTH*, adj. [from both, Sax.] The two; as well the one as the other. Et l'un & l'autre, Fr.] It is used only of two.
And the next day, both morning and afternoon, he was kept by our party. Sidney.
Moses and the prophets, Christ and his apostles, were in their times all preachers of God's truth; some by word, some by writing; some by both. Hosier.
Which of them shall I take?
Both? one? or neither? neither can be enjoy'd,
If both remain alive. Shakespeare.
Two lovers cannot share a single bed;
As therefore both are equal in degree,
The lot of both he left to destiny. Dryden.
A Venus and a Helen have been seen,
Both perjurd wives, the goddesses and the queen. Graville.
- BOTH*, conj. [from the adjective.] As well; it has the conjunction and to correspond with it.

Both the boy was worthy to be prais'd,
And Stimulation has often made me long,
To hear, like him, so sweet a song. Dryden.
BO'TRYOID. adj. [Bo'tryoides.] Having the form of a bunch of grapes.

The outside is thick set with botryoid efflorescences, or small knobs, yellow, bluish, and purple; all of a shining metallic hue. Woodward.

BOYS. n. f. [without a singular.] A species of small worms in the entrails of horses; answering, perhaps, to the ascarides in human bodies.

Pease and beans are as dank here as a dog, and that is the next way to give poor jades the bot; this houle is turned upside down like Robin the oster die. Shakespeare.

BOTTLE. n. f. [bouteille, Fr.]
1. A small vessel of glass, or other matter, with a narrow mouth, to put liquor in.

The shepherd's homely curds,
His cold thin drink out of his leather bottle,
Is far beyond a prince's delicates. Shakespeare.

Many have a manner, after other mens speech, to shake their heads. A great officer would say, it was as men shake a bottle, to see if there was any wit in their heads, or no. Bacon.

Then if thy ale in galls thou wouldst confine,
Let thy clean bottle be entirely dry. King.
He threw into the enemy's ships earthen bottles filled with serpents, which put the crew in disorder, and made them fly. Arbutnot on Cenci.

2. A quantity of wine usually put into a bottle; a quart.
Sir, you shall stay, and take t'other bottle. Speclator.

3. A quantity of hay or grass bundled up.
Methinks I have a great desire to a bottle of hay; good hay, sweet hay, hath no fellow. Shakespeare.

But I should wither in one day, and pass
To a lock of hay, that am a bottle of grass. Donne.
TO BOTTLING. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose in bottles.
You may have it a most excellent cyder royal, to drink or to bottle. Swift.

When a hoghead of wine is to be bottled off, wash your bottles immediately before you begin; but be sure not to drain them.

BOTTLE is often compounded with other words; as, bottle-friend, a drinking friend; bottle-companion.
Sam, who is a very good bottle-companion, has been the diversion of his friends. Adelphi.

BOTTLE-FLOWER. n. f. [yanus, Lat.] A plant.
It hath a squamose hairy calyx; the disk of the flower is almost plain, but the outer florets, round the borders, are large, tubulous, and deeply cut in; these outer florets are always barren; but the inner florets have a single naked seed succeeding each. The species are, 1. The greater broad-leaved blue-bottle, commonly called glabe flower. 2. The greater narrow-leaved blue-bottle, or glabe flower. 3. The purple swart sultan. 4. Corn-bottle, with a white flower. The first and second sorts are abiding plants, which increase greatly by their creeping roots. The swart sultan will begin to flower, and continue till the frost prevents them. The corn-bottles were also annuals, which, for the diversity of their flowers, were propagated in gardens; but of late years they are almost excluded. Müller.

BOTTLESCREW. n. f. [from bottle and screw.] A screw to pull out the cork.

A good butler always breaks off the point of his bottlescrew in two days, by trying which is hardest, the point of the screw, or the neck of the bottle. Swift.

BOTTOM. n. f. [born, Saxon; boden, Germ.]

1. The lowest part of any thing.
2. The ground under the water.
Shallow brooks that flow'd do clear,
The bottom did the top appear. Dryden.

The foundation; the ground-work.
On this supposition my reasonings proceed, and cannot be affected by objections which are far from being built on the same bottom. Atterbury.

4. A dale; a valley; a low ground.
In the purlicious flands a sheep-cote,
West of this place; down in the neighbour bottom. Shakespeare, As you like it.

On both the shores of that fruitful bottom, which I have before mentioned, are still to be seen the marks of ancient edifices. Adelphi on Italy.

Equal convexity could never be seen: the inhabitants of such an earth could have only the prospect of a little circular plain, which would appear to have an acclivity on all sides; so that every man would fancy himself the lowell, and that he always dwelt and moved in a bottom. Bentley.

5. The part most remote from the view; the deepest part.
His proposals and arguments should with freedom be examined to the bottom, that, if there be any mistake in them, no body may be misled by his reputation. Locke.

6. Bound; limit.
But there's no bottom, none,
In my voluptuousness. Shakespeare.

7. The utmost extent or profundity of any man's capacity, whether deep or shallow.

There being prepared a number of flat-bottomed boats, to transport the land-forces, under the wing and protection of the great navy. Bacon.

BOTTOMLESS. adj. [from bottom.] Without a bottom; fathomless.

Wickedness may well be compared to a bottomless pit, into which it is easier to keep one's self from falling, than being fallen, to give one's self any stay from falling infinitely. Swiss.

Is not my sorrow deep, having no bottom?
Then be my passions bottomless with them. Shakespeare.

Him the Almighty pow'r
Hurl'd headlong, flaming from th' ethereal sky,
To bottomless perdition. Milton.

BOTTOMRY. n. f. [in navigation and commerce.] The act of borrowing money on a ship's bottom; that is, by engaging the vessel for the repayment of it, so as that, if the ship miscarry, the lender loses the money advanced; but if it arrives safe at the end of the voyage, he is to repay the money lent, with a certain premium or interest agreed on; and this on pain of forfeiting the ship. Harris.

BOUCHET. n. f. [French] A sort of pear.

BOUD. n. f. An infench which breeds in malt; called also a wortvil. Ditch.

TO BOUGH. v. n. [bouge, Fr.] To swell out.

BOUCH. n. f. [boze, Sax. the gh is mute.] An arm or large shoot of a tree, bigger than a branch, yet not always distinguished from it.

Their lord and patron loud did him proclaim,
And at his feet their laudal laughs did throw. Fairy Queen.

- From the lough
 She gave him of that fair enticing fruit. Milton.
 As the dove's flight did guide Aeneas, now
 May thus conduct me to the golden lough. Dante.
 Under some fair tree myrtle's shady hough,
 They speak their passions in repeated vows. Reformation.
 See how, on every hough, the birds express,
 In their sweet notes, their happiness.
 "Twas all her joy the ripening fruits to tend,
 And see the houghs with happy burdens bend. Pope.
 BOUNTY, pret. of to bouy; which see.
 BOUNTY, n. f. [from to bouy]

 sound.]
 1. To fall or fly against any thing with great force, so as to rebound.
 The fright awaken'd Arcite with a start,
 Against his bosom bounc'd his heaving heart. Dryden.
 Just as I was putting out my light, another bounces as hard as he can knock. Swift.
 2. To spring; to make a sudden leap.
 High nonfence is like beer in a bottle, which has, in reality, no strength and spirit, but frets, and dries, and bounces, and imitates the passions of a much nobler liquor. Addison.
 Rous'd by the noise,
 And musical clatter,
 They bounce from their nest,
 No longer will tarry.
 Out bounc'd the inaffix of the triple head;
 Away the hare with double swiftness fled. Swift.
 3. To boalt; to bully; a sense only used in familiar speech.
 4. To be bold, or strong.
 Forsooth the bouncing Amazon,
 Your buff in'd mistress, and your warrior love,
 To Theicus must be wedded. Shakspeare.
 BOWSER, n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. A strong sudden blow.
 The bounce burst open the door; the scornful fair
 Reckless look'd, and saw him beat his quivering feet in air. Dryden.
 2. A sudden crack or noise.
 What cannoner begot this lusty blow?
 He speaks plain cannon fire, and smoke, and bounce;
 He gives the battinado with his tongue. Shakspeare.
 Two hazel-nuts I threw into the flame,
 And to each nut I gave a sweetheart's name;
 This with the loudst bounce me fore amaz'd,
 That in a flame of brightest colour blaz'd. Gay.
 3. A blow; a thrust; in low language.
 BOWSER, n. f. [from bounce.] A boaster; a bully; an empty braggart.
 BOUND, n. f. [from bind.]
 1. A limit; a boundary; that by which any thing is terminated.
 Illimitable ocean! without bound;
 Without dimension; where length, breadth, and height,
 And time, and place, are lost. Milton.
 The vast Scythian regions were separated by the common natural bounds, of rivers, lakes, mountains, woods, or marshes. Temple.
 Indus and Ganges, our wide empire's bounds,
 Swell their dy'd currents with their natives' wounds. Dryden.
 Which flaming Phleggeon furrows,
 Set Orpheus with his consort lost. Pope.
 2. A limit by which any excursion is restrained.
 Hath he set bounds between their love and me?
 I am their mother, who shall bar me from them. Shak.
 Stronger and fiercer by restraint he roars,
 And knows no bound, but makes his pow'r his shores. D. n.
 Any bounds made with body, even as a lavantine wall, are far from putting a stop to the mind, in its farther progress in space. Locke.
 3. From to bound, v. n. A leap; a jump; a spring.
 No XVII.

- Do but note a wild and wanton herd,
 Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
 Fetching mad bounds, bellowing, and neighing loud. Shakspeare. Merchant of Venice.
 The horses started with a sudden bound,
 And flung the reins and chariot to the ground. Addison.
 Dext'rous he 'scapes the coach with nimble bounds,
 Whilst every honest tongue flap th' rebound. Gay.
 4. A rebound; the leap of something flying back by the force of the blow.
 These inward disgusts are but the first bound of this ball of contention. Dryden.
 7. BOUND, v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To limit; to terminate.
 A lofty tow'r, and strong on every side,
 With treble walls, which Phleggeon furrows,
 Whole fiery flood the burning empire bound. Dryden.
 2. To restrain; to confine.
 Take but degree away, untune that string,
 The *bound*ed waters
 Would lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
 And make a kop of all this solid globe. Shakspeare.
 7. BOUND, v. n. [from the noun, Fr.]
 1. To jump; to spring; to move forward by leaps.
 My mother's blood
 Runs on the deater cheek, and this finifer bound in my life's. Shakspeare.
 Torrifmond appear'd,
 Gave me his hand, and led me lightly o'er,
 Leaping and bounding on the billows heads.
 Before his lord the ready fawn'd bound,
 Panting with hope, he tries the furrow'd grounds. Pope.
 When fudden through the woods a bounding stag
 Rush'd headlong down, and plung'd amidst the river. Rever.
 Warbling to the vary'd strain, advance
 Two brightly youths, to form the bounding dance. Pope.
 2. To rebound; to fly back by repercussion.
 Mark then a bounding saviour in our English,
 That being dead, like to the bullets grazing,
 Breaks out into a second course of mischief. Shakspeare.
 7. BOUND, v. a. To make to bound.
 If I might buffet for any love, or bound my horse for her favours, I would lay on like a butcher, and fit like a jackanapes, never off. Shakspeare.
 If love, ambitious, fought a match of birth,
 Whole veins bound richer blood than Lady Dianch? Shak.
 BOUND, participle passive of bind.
 Nay, said Pamela, none shall take that office from myself, being so much bound as I am for my education. Steele.
 This is Antonio,
 To whom I am so infinitely bound.—
 —You should in all sense be much bound to him;
 For, as I hear, he was much bound for you. Shakspeare.
 The gentleman is learn'd, a most rare speaker,
 To nature none more bound. Shakspeare.
 The bishops of Hungary, being wonderfully rich, were bound to keep great numbers of horsemens, which they used to bring into the field. Kneiler.
 They furnished the governor to deliver it to them, or else they would not leave one stone upon another. To which the governor made no other reply, than that he was not bound to repair it; but, however, he would, by God's help, keep the ground afterwards. Clarendon.
 BOUND, adj. [a word of doubtful etymology.] Defined; intending to come to any place.
 His is that care, whom most it doth concern,
 Said he; but whither with such hasty flight
 Art thou now bound? for well might I discern Great cause, that carries thee so swift and light. F. Queen.
 To be bound for a port one desires extremely, and fail to it, with a fair gale, is very pleasant. Temple.
 Willing we fought your shores, and hither bound,
 The port to long dur'd, at length we found. Dryden.
 BOUNDARY, n. f. [from bound.] Limit; bound.
 He follows the confluence and clamours of the people to pass all boundaries of laws, and reverence to his authority. K. Charles.
 Sensation and reflection are the boundaries of our thoughts; beyond which the mind, whatever efforts it would make, is not able to advance. Locke.
 Great part of our sins consist in the irregularities attending the ordinary pursuits of life; so that our reformation must appear, by pursuing them within the boundaries of duty. Regis.
 BOUNDEN, participle passive of bind.
 Hereafter, in a better world than this,
 I shall desire more love and knowledge of you.—
 —I rest much bounden to you; fare you well. Shakspeare.
 We also most humbly besought him to accept of us as his true servants, by as just a right as ever men on earth were bounden. Bacon.
 To be careful for a provision of all necessities for ourselves, and those who depend on us, is a bounden duty. Regis.

BO'UNDING-STONE. } n. f. A stone to play with.
BOUND-STONE.

I am past a boy;
 A sceptre's but a play-thing, and a globe
Dryden.
 A bigger bounding-stone.
BO'UNDLESS. n. f. [from boundless.] Exemption from limits.
 God has corrected the boundless of his voluptuous desires,
 by stinting his capacities.
BO'UNDLESS. adj. [from bound.] Unlimited; unconfin'd; immeasurable; illimitable.
 Beyond the infinite and boundless reach
 Of mercy, if thou didst this deed of death,
Shakespeare.
 Art thou damn'd, Hubert.
 Heav'n has of right all victory design'd;
 Whence boundless power dwells in a will confin'd. Dryden.
 Man seems as boundless in his desires, as God is in his being;
 and therefore nothing but God himself can satisfy him. South.
 Though we make duration boundless as it is, we cannot extend it beyond all being. God fills eternity, and it is hard to find a reason, why any one should doubt that he fills immensity. Lect.

Some guide the course of wand'ring orbs on high,
 Or toll the planets through the boundless sky. Pope.
BO'UNTIOUS. adj. [from bounty.] Liberal; kind; generous; munificent; beneficent: a word used chiefly in poetry for bountiful.

Every one,
 According to the gift, which bounteous nature
 Hath in him inclin'd. Shakespeare.
 Her foul abhorring avarice, Dryden.
Bounteous; but almost bounteous to a vice.
BO'UNTIOUSLY. adv. [from bounteous.] Liberally; generously; largely.

BO'UNTIFUL. } wholly out of use.

This goodly frame of temperance,
 Formerly ground'd, and fast settl'd Fairy Queen.
 On firm foundation of true bountifulness.
 How shall frail pen, with fear disparag'd,
 Conceive such sovereign glory, and great bountifulness? F. 2.
BO'UNTIFUL. n. f. [from bounty, Fr.]

1. Generosity; liberality; munificence.
 We do not so far magnify her exceeding bounty, as to affirm, that she bringeth into the world the fons of men, adorned with gorgeous attire. Hooker.

If you knew to whom you shew this honour,
 I know you would be prouder of the work,
 Than customary bounty can enforce you. Shakespeare.
 Such moderation with thy bounty join,
 That thou may'st nothing give, that is not thine. Drum.

Those godlike men, to wanting virtue kind,
Bounty will plac'd prefer'd, and well design'd,
 To all their titles. Dryden.
 2. It seems distinguished from charity, as a present from an alm; being used, when persons, not absolutely necessitous, receive gifts; or when gifts are given by great persons.
 'Tell a miser of bounty to a friend, or mercy to the poor, and he will not understand it. South.

Her majesty did not see this question so proper to excite charity and compassion; though I affirm not but her royal bounty will extend itself to them. Addison.

To BOW. v. n. [from bourgeois, Fr.] To sprout; to shoot into branches; to put forth buds.
 Long may the dew of heaven distil upon them, to make them bourgeois and propagate among themselves. Hawes.

O that I had the fruitful heads of Hydras,
 That one might bourgeois where another fell!
 Still would I give thee work! Dryden.
BOWN. n. f. [from bow, Fr.]

1. A bound; a limit.
Bow n. bound of land, tilth, vineyard, none. Shakespeare.
 'Tis undiscov'rd country, from whose bourn
 No traveller e'er returns. Shakespeare.

False,
 As dice are to be with'd, by one that fixes
 No bow 'twixt his and mine. Shakespeare.

I know each lane, and every alley green,
 And every bosky bourn from hedge to side. Milton.

2. [from buy, Saxon.] A brook; a torrent, whence many towns, seated near brooks, have names ending in bourn. It is not now used in either sense; though the second continues in the Scottish dialect.

Ne swelling Neptune, ne loud thund'ring Jove,
 Can change my charity, or make me ever mourn;
 My little boat can safely pass this perilous bow. F. 2.
TO BOUSE. v. n. [from bouse, Dut.] To drink intemperately; to tope.

As he rode, he somewhat fill'd it, and
 And in his hand did bear a bousing can,
 Of which he sipp'd. Fairy Queen.

Bow'sy. adj. [from bouse.] Drunken.
 The guests upon the day appointed came,
 Each bowsy farmer with his sunning dame. King.

With a long legend of romantic things,
 Which in his cups the bowsy poet sings. Dryden.

BOUT. n. f. [from bout, Ital.] A turn; as much of an action as is performed at one time, without interruption; a single part of any action carried on by successive intervals.

The play began: 'Tis durst not Cosmo chase;
 But did intend next bout with her to meet. Sidney.

Ladies, that have your feet
 Unplag'd with corns, we'll have a bout. Shakespeare.

When in your motion you are hot,
 As make your bouts more violent to that end,
 He calls for drink. Shakespeare.

If he chance to 'scape this dismal bout,
 The former legates are blotted out. Dryden.

A weasel seized a bat; the bat begged for life: says the weasel, I give no quarter to birds: says the bat, I am a mouse;
 look on my body: so she got off for that bout. L'Estrange.

We'll see when 'tis enough,
 Or if it wants the nice concluding bout. King.

BOUTEFEU. n. f. [French.] An incendiary; one who kindles feuds and discontents.

Animated by a base fellow, called John à Chamber, a very boutefeu, who bore much sway among the vulgar, they entered into open rebellion. Bacon.

Nor could ever any order be obtained impartially to punish the known boutefeu, and open incendiaries. King Charles.

Besides the herd of boutefeus,
 We set on work within the house. Hudibras.

BO'UTIFUL. n. f. [I suppose from bout or bout, and ful.]
 A sale at a cheap rate; as booty or plunder is commonly sold.

To speak nothing of the great boutifal of colleges and chantries. Sir J. Heyward.

BOUTS RIMEZ. [French.] The last words or rhymes of a number of verses given to be filled up.

To BOW. v. a. [from bow, Saxon.]

1. To bend, or incline.

A threepence bowl'd would hire me, Shakespeare.
 Old as I am, to queen it.

Orpheus, with his lute, made trees,
 And the mountain tops, that freeze,
 Bow themselves when he did sing. Shakespeare.

Some bowl the vines, which bury'd in the plain,
 Their tops in distant arches rise again. Dryden.

The mind has not been made obedient to discipline, when at first it was most tender and most easy to be bowl'd. Lect.

2. To bend the body in token of respect or submission.

They came to meet him, and bowed themselves to the ground before him, 2 Kings.

Is it to bowl down his head as a bulrush, and to spread sick-cloth and ashes under him? wilt thou call this a fault, and an acceptable day to the Lord? Isaiah.

3. To bend, or incline, in condescension.

Let it not grieve thee to bowl down thine ear to the poor, and give him a friendly answer. Ecclij.

4. To depress; to crush.

Are you so gospel'd,
 To pray for this good man, and for his ill,
 Whose heavy hand hath bowl'd us to the grave,
 And beggar'd yours for ever. Shakespeare.

Now wasting years my former strength confound,
 And added woes may bowl me to the ground. Pope.

To BOW. v. n.

1. To bend; to suffer flexure.

2. To make a reverence.

Rather let my head
Stoop to the block, than these knees bow to any,
Save to the God of heav'n, and to my king. Shakspeare
This is the great idol to which the world bows; to this we pay our devoutest homage. Disney of Pity
Admir'd, ador'd by all the circling crowd,
For whereof'er she turn'd her face, they bow'd. Dryden

Thou art thence banish'd, we would muster all
From twelve to seventy; and pouring war
Into the bowels of ungrateful Rome,

Shakspeare.

Like a bold flood appear.
His soldiers spying his undaunted spirit,
A Talbot! Talbot! cried out amain,
And rush'd into the bowels of the battle.

Shakspeare.

As he saw drops of water distilling from the rock, by following the veins, he has made himself two or three fountains in the bowels of the mountain. Addison

3. 'Fend'rnecs; compassion.
He had no other consideration of money, than for the support of his lustre; and whilst he could do that, he cared not for money; having no bowels in the point of running in debt, or borrowing all he could. Clarendon

4. This word is seldom has a singular, except in writers of anatomy.

BoWER, n. f. [from bow or branch, or from the verb to bow or to bend.]

Landships how gay the bow'ry grotto yields,
Which thought creates, and lavish fancy builds. Tickell
Snatch'd through the verdant maze the hurried eye
Distracted wanders: now the bow'ry walk
Of covert clove, where scarce a speck of day
Falls on the lengthen'd gloom, protracted sweeps. Thomson

To BOWKE. See To BOUGE.

BOWL, n. f. [budell, Welch; which signifies, according to Juanus, any thing made of horn, as drinking cups anciently were. It is pronounced bowl.]
1. A vessel to hold liquids, rather wide than deep; distinguished from a cup, which is rather deep than wide.

Give me a bowl of wine;
I have not that alacrity of spirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have. Richard III.

If a piece of iron be fastened on the side of a bowl of water, a loadstone, in a boat of cork, will presently make into it.

Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The sacred priests, with ready knives, bereave
The beasts of life, and in full bowls receive
The streaming blood. Dryden

While the bright Scin, t' exalt the foul,
With sparkling plenty crows the bowl,
And wit and social mirth inspires. Fenton to Lord Gower when the sail is fuiled across, to hale up its bunt, that it may the more readily be taken up or let fall. Harris.

BRAIN. n. f. [by ægen, Sax. bræn, Dutch.]
1. That collection of vessels and organs in the head, from which sense and motion arise.

The brain is divided into cerebrum and cerebellum. Cerebrum is that part of the brain, which possesses all the upper and forepart of the cranium, being separated from the cerebellum by the second process of the dura mater, under which the cerebellum is situated. The substance of the brain is distinguished into outer and inner; the former is called external, inner, or glandular; the latter, medulla is, alba, or nervosa. Chester.

If I be served such another trick, I'll have my brain ta'en out, and buttered, and give them to a dog for a new year's gift.
Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

That man proportionally hath the largest brain, I did, I confess, somewhat doubt, and conceived it might have failed in birds, especially such as having little bodies, have yet large craniums, and seem to contain much brain, as snipes and wood-cocks; but, upon trial, I find it very true. Brewer's Fug. Err.
2. That part in which the understanding is placed; therefore taken for the understanding.

The force they are under is a real force, and that of their fate but an imaginary conceived one; the one but in their brain, the other on their shoulders. Hammond.
A man is still a geometrician in his brain, before he be such in his hand. Hale.

3. Sometimes the affections.
My son Edgar! had he a hand to write this, a heart and brain to breed it in? Shakspeare.

To BRAIN. v. a. [from the noun.] To dash out the brains;
to kill by beating out the brains.
Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him 't' th' afternoon to sleep; there thou may'st brain him. Shakspeare.

Outlaws of nature,
Fit to be shot and brain'd, without a process,
To stop infection; that's their proper death. Dryden.
Next seiz'd two wretches more, and headlong cast,
Brain'd on the rock, his second due reposit. Pope.

BRAINISH. adj. [from brain.] Hotheaded; furious; as cerebrus in Latin.

In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras hearing something stir,
He whips his rapier out, and cries, a rat!
And, in his brainish apprehension, kills
The unseen good old man. Shakspeare.

BRAINLESS. adj. [from brain.] Silly; thoughtless; witless.
Some brain is men have, by great travel and labour, brought to pass, that the church is now ashamed of nothing more than of fables. Hosier.

If the dull brainless Ajax come false off,
We'll deck him up in voices. Shakspeare.
The brainless stripling, who, expell'd the town,
Damn'd the stiff college, and pedantic gown,
And'd by thy name, is dumb. Tickell.

BRAIN-PAN. n. f. [from brain and pan.] The skull containing the brains.

With those huge bellows in his hands, he blows
New fire into my head: my brain glows. Dryden.
BRAINICK. adj. [from brain and ick.] Dicaled in the understanding; addleheaded; giddy; thoughtless.

Nor once dejected the courage of our minds,
Because Cassandra's mad; her brainick raptures
Cannot dilute the goodness of a quarrel. Shakspeare.
They were brainick men, who could neither endure the government of their king, nor yet thankfully receive the authours of their deliverance. Knotley.

BRAINICKLY. adv. [from brainick.] Weakly; headily.
Why, worthythane,
You do unbend your noble strength to think
So brainickly of things. Shakspeare.

BRAINICKER. n. f. [from brainick.] Brainicker, *god-

BRAKE. The pretense of break.
He thought it sufficient to conceal the multitude with these words; and brake out into this enclitic speech. Klein.

BRAKE. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.] A thicket of bram-bles, or of thorns.
A dog of this town used daily to fetch meat, and to carry the same unto a blind maitiff, that lay in a brake without the town. Cornwall.

If I'm traduc'd by tongue, which neither know
My faculties nor person; let me say,
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through. Shakspeare.

In every bush and brake, where hap may find
The serpent sleeping.
Full little thought of him the gentle knight,
Whom, lying dead, had there conceal'd a night,
In brakes and brambles hid, and flunning mortal light. }
Dryden's Fables.

BRAKE. n. f.
1. An instrument for dressing hemp or flax.
2. The handle of a ship's pump.
3. A baker's kneading trough.
4. A sharp bit or snaffle for horses. Did.

BRA'KY. adj. [from brake.] Thorny; prickly; rough.
Reductum arts from their rough and bra'ky leats, where they lie hid and overgrown with thorns, to a pure, open light, where they may take the eye, and may be taken by the hand. Bacon's John.

BRAMBLE. n. f. [from brake, Sax. bram, Lat.]

1. This plant hath a flower consisting of five leaves, which are placed circularly, and expand in form of a rose; the flower-cup is divided into five parts, containing many stamens, orches, in the bottom of the flower; in the centre of which rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes the fruit, consisting of many protuberances, and full of juice. The species are; 1. The common bramble, or blackberry bush. 2. The dewberry bush, or lesser bramble. 3. The common greater bramble bush, with a beautiful white fruit. 4. The greater bramble bush, with a striped leaf. 5. The raspberry bush, or handberry. 6. The raspberry bush, with white fruit. 7. The raspberry bush, with late red fruit. 8. The raspberry bush, without thorns. 9. The Virginian raspberry bush, with black fruit. The first and second sorts are very common in hedges, and upon dry banks, in moist parts of England, and are rarely cultivated in gardens.
The third sort was found by Mr. Jacob Bohart in a hedge, not far from Oxford. The fourth sort is a variety of the common bramble, differing therefrom only in having striped leaves. The raspberry bush is also very common in divers woods, in the na-thern counties of England; but is cultivated in all curious gardens, for the sake of its fruit. All these plants are easily propagated by suckers, which they send from the roots in great plenty. The best time to take them off, and transplant them, is in October. Adams.

2. It is taken, in popular language, for any rough prickly bush.
The bush my bed, the bramble was my bow,
The woods can witness many a woful rose. Spenser.
There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hanging odds upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. Shakspeare.

Content with food, which nature freely breed,
On wildings and on strawberries they fed:
Cornels and bramble berries gave the rest,
And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast.
Thy younglings, Cuddy, are but just awake,
No thrushes thrill the bramble bush forsake. Dryden.

BRAMBLING. n. f. A bird, called also a mountain chaffinch. Did.

BRAN. n. f. [from brake, Ital.] The husks of corn ground; the residue of the sieve.
From me do back receive the flow'rs of all,
And leave me but the bran. Shakspeare.

The citizens were driven to great distress for want of victuals; bread they made of the coarsest flax, moulded in cloths;
for otherwise it would not cleave together. Huyward.
In the sifting of fourteen years of power and favour, all that came out, could not be pure meal, but must have, among it, a certain mixture of padar and bran, in this lower age of human fragility. Ham.

I cannot bolt this matter to the bran,
As Pradwardin and holy Austin can. Dryden.
Then water him, and drinking what he can,
Encourage him to thirst again with bran. Dryden.

BRANCH. n. f. [from brake, Fr.]
1. The shoot of a tree from one of the main boughs. See Bough.

Why grow the branches, when the root is gone?
Why withdraw not the leaves that want their sap? Shakspeare.
2. Any member or part of the whole; any distinct article; any section or subdivision. Young.

Your oaths are past, and now subscribe your names,
That his own hand may strike his honour down,
That violates the smallest branch herein.

Shakspeare, Lewis's Late-r Lgt.

The belief of this was of special importance, to confirm our hope of another life, on which so many branches of christian poetry does immediately depend.

Hemond.

In the several branches of justice and charity, comprehended in those general rules, of loving our neighbour as ourselves, and of doing to others as we would have them do to us, there is nothing but what is most fit and reasonable.

Tillatun.

This precept will oblige us to perform our duty, according to the nature of the various branches of it.

Rogeri.

3. Any part that shoots out from the rest.

And six branches shall come out of the sides of it; three branches of the candlestick out of the one side, and three branches of the candlestick out of the other side.

Exodus.

His blood, which disperseth itself by the branches of veins, may be resembled to waters carried by brooks.

Robrich.

4. A smaller river running into, or proceeding from a larger.

If, from a main river, any branch be separated and divided, then, where that branch doth first bound itself with new banks, there is that part of the river where the branch forsaketh the main stream, called the head of the river.

Rabrich.

5. Any part of a family descending in a collateral line.

His father, a younger branch of the ancient flock planted in Somersetshire, took to wife the widow.

Carver.

6. The offspring; the descendant.

Great Anthony! Spain's well-becoming pride,

Thou mighty branch of emperours and kings!

Cragshaw.

7. The antlers or shoots of a stag's horn.

The branches of a bridle are two pieces of bended iron, that bear the bit-mouth, the chains, and the curb, in the interval between the one and the other.

Farrin's Dict.

8. [In architecture.] The arches of Gothick vaults; which arches transferring from one angle to another, diagonal ways, form a cross between the other arches, which make the sides of the square, of which the arches, are diagonals.

Harris.

9. FRANCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To spread in branches.

They were trained together in their childhoods, and there stood between them such an affection, which cannot choose but branch now.

Shakspeare.

The cause of scattering the boughs, is the hasty breaking forth of the sap; and therefore those trees rise not in a body of any height, but branch near the ground. The cause of the prunus, is the keeping in of the sap, long before it branch, and the spending of it, when it beginneth to branch by equal degrees.

Bacon.

Plant it round with floude

Of laurel, ever-green, and branching pine.

Milton.

Straight as a line in beauteous order flood,

Of oaks unhorn a venerable wood;

Fiesta was the grass beneath, and every tree

At distance plaited, in a due degree,

Their branching arms in air, with equal space,

Stretch'd to their neighbours with a long embrace.

Dryden.

One sees her things transform'd, another views

Her arms shot out, and branching into boughs.

Addison.

1. To spread into separate and distinct parts and subdivisions.

The Alps at the one end, and the long range of Apennines cut paces through the body of it, branch out, on all sides, into several different divisions.

Addison.

If we would weigh, and keep in our minds, what it is we are considering, that would best instruct us when we should,

or should not, branch into farther distinctions.

Locke.

3. To speak diffusively, or with the distinction of the parts of a discourse.

I have known a woman branch out into a long dissertation upon the edging of a petticoat.

Spectator.

4. To have horns shooting out into antlers.

The swift flag from under ground

Bee up his branching head.

Milton.

5. FRANCH. v. a.

1. To divide up into branches.

The spirit of things animate are all continued within themselves, and are branch'd in canals, as blood is; and the spirits have not only branches, but certain cells or seats, where the principal spirits do reside.

Bacon.

2. To adorn with needle-work, representing flowers and sprigs:

In robe of lily white she was array'd,

That from her shoulder to her heel down caught,

The train wherof look'd far behind her stay'd,

Branch'd with gold and pearl, most richly wrought.

Spenser's Fairy Queen.

3. FRANCH. n. f. [from branch.]

1. One that shoots out into branches.

If their child be not such a speedy spreader and brancher, like the vine, such may yield, with a little longer expectation, as well and more sober fruit than the other.

Watts.

2. In botany, a young hawk. [brancher, Fr.]

I enlarge my discourse to the observation of the cires, the brancher, and the two sorts of leuteurs.

Walton.

BRANCHINESS. n. f. [from branch.] Fulness of branches.

BRANCHLESS. adj. [from branch.]

Without shoots or boughs.

2. Without any valuable product; naked.

If I lose mine honour,

I lose myself; better I were not yours,

Than yours to branchless.

Shakspeare.

BRANCHY. adj. [from branch.] Full of branches; spreading.

Trees on trees o'erthrown,

Fall crackling round him, and the forests groan;

Sudden full twenty on the plain are strow'd,

And lopp'd, and lighten'd of their branchy load.

What carriage can bear away all the various, rude, and unwisely loppings of a branchy tree at once?

Watts.

BRAND. n. f. [brand, Saxon.]

1. A stick lighted, or fit to be lighted in the fire.

Have I caught thee?

He that parts us shall bring a brand from heav'n,

And fire us hence.

Shakspeare.

Take it, the said, and when you needs require,

This little brand will serve to light your fire.

Dryden.

If, with double diligence they labour to retrieve the hours they have lost, they shall be saved; though this is a service of great difficulty, and like a brand plucked out of the fire.

Rogeri.

2. A sword, in old language. [brandur, Runick.]

They looking back, all the eastern side beheld

Of paradise, so late their happy seat!

Wav'd over by that flaming brand; the gate

With deadfall faces throng'd, and fiery arms.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. A thunderbolt.

The fire omnipotent prepares the brand,

By Vulcan wrought, and arms his potent hand;

Then flaming huris it.

Graville.

4. A mark made by burning a criminal with a hot iron, to note him as infamous.

Clerks convict should be burned in the han's both because they might taste of some corporal punishment, and that they might carry a brand of infamy.

Bacon.

The rules of good and evil are inverted, and a brand of infamy passes for a badge of honour.

L'Estrange.

Where did his wit on learning fix a brand,

And rail at arts he did not understand?

Dryden.

5. BRAND. v. a. [branden, Dutch.] To mark with a brand, or note of infamy.

Have I liv'd thus long a wife, a true one,

Never yet brand'd with suspicion?

Shakspeare.

The king was after brand'd, by Perkin's proclamation, for an execrable breaker of the rights of holy church.

Bacon.

Brand not their actions with so foul a name;

Pity, at least, what we are forc'd to blame.

Ha! dare not for thy life, I charge thee, dare not

To brand the spotless virtue of my prince.

Rever.

Our Punick faith

Is infamous, and brand'd to a proverb.

Addison.

The spreader of the pardons answered him an easier way, by branding him with heresy.

Astbury.

BRANDGOOSE. n. f. A kind of wild fowl, less than a common goose, having its breast and wings of a dark colour.

DiL.

1. BRANDISH. v. a. [from brand, a sword.]

To wave, or shake, or flourish, as a weapon.

Brave Macbeth,

Disdaining fortune, with his brandish'd steel,

Lake valour's minion, carved out his passage.

Shakspeare.

He said, and brandishing at once his blade,

With eager pace pursu'd the flaming shade.

Dryden.

Let me march their leader, not their prince;

And, at the head of your renown'd Cydonians,

Brandish this sam'd sword.

Smith.

2. To play with; to flourish.

He, who shall employ all the force of his reason, only in brandishing of syllogisms, will discover very little.

Locke.

BRANDLING. n. f. The name for a particular worm.

The dew-worm, which some also call the lob-worm, and the brandling, are the chief.

Walton.

BRANDY. n. f. [contracted from brandwine, or burnt wine.]

A strong liquor distilled from wine.

If he travels the country, and lodgeth at inns, every dram of brandy extraordinary that you drink, raise his character.

Swift's Directions to the Postman.

BRANDY-WINE. The same with brandy.

It has been a common saying, A hair of the same dog; and thoughts, that brandy-wine is a common relief to such.

Wifeman.

BRANGLE. n. f. [uncertainly derived.] Squabble; wrangle.

The payment of tythes in this kingdom, is subject to many frauds, brangles, and other difficulties, not only from papists and dissenters, but even from those who profess themselves protestants.

Swift.

1. To BRANGLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To wrangle; to squabble.

When polite conversing shall be improved, company will be no

Their batt'ring cannon charged to the mouths;
Till their soul-fearing clamours have brauz'd down
The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city. Shakefp.
In council the gives licence to her tongue
Loquacious, brav'ing, ever in the wrong. Dryden;
Leave all noisy counsels, all immodest clamours, brav'ing language, and especially all personal scandal and scurrility, to the meanest part of the vulgar world. Watts.

2. To speak loud and indelicately.
His divisions, as the times do brawl,
Are in three heads; one pow'r against the French,
And one against Glendower. Shakespeare.

3. To make a noise.
As he lay along
Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out
Upon the brook that bravels along this wood. Shakefp.
BRAWL, n. f. [from the verb.] Quarrel; noise; scurrility.
He findeth, that controversies thereby are made but bravels;
and therefore witheth, that, in some lawful assembly of churches,
all these strifes may be decided. Havies.
Never since that middle summer's spring
Met we on hill, in dale, forest, or mead,
But with thy bravels thou hast disturb'd our sport. Shakespeare.

That bonum is an animal,
Made good with stout polemick brawl. Hudibras.
BRAWLER, n. f. [from brawl.] A wrangler; a quarreller, noisy fellow.

An advocate may incur the censure of the court, for being a brawler in court, on purpose to lengthen out the cause. Ayliffe.
BRAWN, n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. The fleshy or muscular part of the body.
The brawn of the arm must appear full, shadowed on one side, then show the wrist-bone thereof. Peascham.
But most their looks on the black monarch bend,
His rising muscles and his brawns commend;
His double biting ax, and beamy spear,
Each asking a gigantic force to rear. Dryden.
2. The arm, so called from its being muscularous.
I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver,
And in my vanbrace put this wither'd brawn. Shakefp.

- I had purpose
Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn. Shakefp.
3. Bufe; muscular strength.
Thy boist'rous hands are then of use, when I,
With this directing head, those hands apply;
Brawns without brain is thine. Dryden.

at which time it is best to geld him, or sell him for brawn. Mortimer.

c. A boar.
BRAWNER, n. f. [from brawn.] A boar killed for the table.
At Christmas time be careful of your fame,
See the old tenant's table be the same;
Then if you would fend up the brawner head,
Sweet rosemary and bays around it spread. King.

BRAWNINESS, n. f. [from brawniness.] Strength; hardiness.
This brawniness and infensibility of mind, is the best armour
we can have against the common evils and accidents of life. Locke.

BRAWNY, adj. [from brawn.] Muscularous; fleshy; bulky; of great muscles and strength.

The brawny fool, who did his vigour boast,
In that presuming confidence was lost. Dryden.
The native energy
Turns all into the substance of the tree,
Staves and destroys the fruit, is only made
For brawny bulk, and for a barren trade. Dryden.

BRAY, v. a. [byacan, Sax. bræira, Fr.] To pound; or grind small.

I'll burst him; I will bray
His bones as in a mortar. Chapman.
Except you would bray christendom in a mortar, and mould
it into a new paste, there is no possibility of a holy war. Bacon.

BRAY, v. n. [bræire, Fr. bræire, Lat.]

1. To make a noise as an ass.
Laugh, and they Return it louder than an ass can bray. Dryden.
2. To make an offensive or disagreeable noise.

What, shall our scalp be kept with slaughter'd men?
Shall braying trumpets, and loud churchil drums,
Clamours of hell, be measures to our pomp. Shakefp.

Arms on armour clashing, bray'd
Horrible discord. Milton.
'Agad if he should hear the lion roar, he'd cudgel him into an ass, and to his primitive braying. Congreve.

BRAY, n. f. [from the verb.] Noise; found.

Loill'rous untun'd drums,
And harsh resounding trumpets dreadful bray. Shakefp.

BRAY, n. f. [from bray.]

1. One that brays like an ass.

XXVIII.

Hold! cry'd the queen; a cat-call each shall win;
Equal your merits, equal is your din!
But that this well-disputed game may end,
Sound forth, my brayers! and the welkin rend. Pope.
2. [With printers; from to bray, or beat.] An instrument to temper the ink.

TO BRAZE, v. a. [from brasi.]

1. To solder with brass.
If the nut be not to be cast in brass, but only hath a worm brazed into it, this niceness is not so absolutely necessary, because that worm is first turned up, and bowed into the grooves of the spindle, and you may try that before it is brazed in the nut. Mason.

2. To harden to impudence.

I have so often blushed to acknowledge him, that now I am brazed to it. Shakefp. King Lear.

If damned custom hath not braz'd it so, Shakefp.

That it is proof and bulwark against sense.

BRAZEN, adj. [from brasi.]

1. Made of brass.

Get also a small pair of brazen compasses, and a fine ruler, for taking the distance. Peascham.

A bough his brazen helmet did sustain;
His heavier arms lay scatter'd on the plain. Dryden.

them to the brazier, you would not lose above a penny in a shilling. Swift.

BREACH, n. f. [from break; breche, Fr.]

1. The act of breaking any thing.

This tempt

Dashing the garment of this peace, aboded

The sudden breach on't. Shakespeare.

2. The state of being broken.

O you kind gods!

Cure this great breach in his abused nature. Shakefp.

3. A gap in a fortification made by a battery.

The wall was blown up in two places; by which breaches the Turks seeking to have entered, made bloody fight. Kneller.

Till mad with rage upon the breach he fir'd,
Slew friends and foes, and in the smoke retir'd. Dryden.

4. The violation of a law or contract.

That oath would fure contain them greatly, or the breach of it bring them to shorter vengeance. Speyger.

What are those breaches of the law of nature and nations, which do forfeit all right in a nation to govern? Bacon.

Breach of duty towards our neighbours, still involves in it a breach of duty towards God. Saith.

The laws of the gospel are the only standing rules of morality; and the penalties annex'd by God to the breach of those laws, the only guards that can effectually restrain men within the true bounds of decency and virtue. Rogers.

5. The opening in a coast.

But th' heedful boatman strongly forth did stretch
His brawny arms, and all his body strain,
That th' utmost sandy breach they thoroly fetch,
While the dread danger does behind remain. Spenser.

6. Difference; quarrel; separation of kindreds.

They have been long before the jealousies and breaches between the armies, would have been composed. Clarendon.

7. Infraction; injury.

This breach upon his kingly power was without a precedent. Clarendon.

BREAD, n. f. [bræob, Saxon.]

1. Food made of ground corn.

Mankind have found the means to make them into bread, which is the lightest and properest aliment for human bodies. Arbutnot.

Bread that decaying man with strength supplie,
And gen'rous wine, which thoughtful sorrow fies. Pope.

2. Food

2. Food in general, such as nature requires: to get bread, implies, to get sufficient for support without luxury. Genius.
In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread.
If these pretenders were not supported by the simplicity of the inquisitive fools, the trade would not find them bread. L'Estrange.
- This dowager on whom my tale I found,
A simple sober life in patience led,
And had but just enough to buy her bread. Dryden.
When I submit to such indignities,
Make me a citizen, a senator of Rome;
To sell my country, with my voice, for bread. Philips.
I neither have been bred a scholar, a soldier, nor to any kind of business; this creates uneasiness in my mind, fearing I shall in time want bread. Spectator.
3. Support of life at large.
God is pleased to try our patience by the ingratitude of those who, having eaten of our bread, have lift up themselves against us. King Charles.
But sometimes virtue starves, while vice is fed; Pope.
What then? is the reward of virtue, bread?
BREAD-CHIPPER. n. f. [from bread and chip.] One that chips bread; a baker's servant.
No abuse, Hal, on my honour; no abuse. — Not to dis-praise me, and call me pander, and bread-chipper, and I know not what? Shakespeare.
- BREAD-CORN. n. f. [from bread and corn.] Corn of which bread is made.
There was not one drop of beer in the town; the bread, and bread-corn, sufficed not for six days. Hayward.
When it is ripe, they gather it, and bruising it among

BREAST. n. f. [bycote, Saxon.]

1. The middle part of the human body, between the neck and the belly.

2. The ducts or teats of women which contain the milk.

The substance of the breasts is composed of a great number of glands, of an oval figure, which lie in a great quantity of fat. Their excretory ducts, as they approach the nipple, join and unite together, till at last they form seven, eight, or more, small pipes, called lactiferi, which have several crook- canals, by which they communicate with one another, that if any of them be stopped, the milk, which was brought to it, might not stagnate, but pass through by the other pipes, which all terminate in the extremity of the nipple. They have arteries and veins from the subclavian and intercostal. They have nerves from the vertebral plexus, and from the sixth pair of the brain. Their use is to separate the milk for the nourishment of the fetus. The tubes, which compose the glands of the breast in maids, like a splinter muckle, contract so close, that no part of the blood can enter them; but when the womb grows big with a fetus, and compresses the descending trunk of the great artery, through the arteries of the breast, and forces a passage into their glands, which, being at first narrow, admits only of a thin water; but growing wider by degrees, as the womb grows bigger, the glands receive a thick serum, and, after birth, they run with a thick milk; because that blood, which before did flow to the fetus, and, for three or four days afterwards, by the uterus, beginning then to stop, does more dilate the mamillary glands.

1. The state or quality of being a brother.

This deep disgrace of brotherhood
 Touches me deeper than you can imagine. Shakespeare.

Finds brotherhood in thee no sharper spur? Shakespeare.

So it be a right to govern, whether you call it supreme brotherhood, or supreme brotherhood, will be all one, provided we know who has it. Lucie.

2. An allocation of men for any purpose; a fraternity.

There was a fraternity of men at arms, call'd the brother- hood of St. George, erected by parliament, confiding of sixteen the most noble and worthy persons. Bacon.

3. A class of men of the same kind.

He was sometimes to be engaged among the wheels, that not above half the pot appeared; at other times, he became as conspicuous as any of the brotherhood. Allyn.

BROTHERLY, adj. [from brother.] Natural; such as becomes or befits a brother.

He was a priest, and looked for a priest's reward; which was our brotherly love, and the good of our souls and bodies. Bacon.

Though more our money than our cause,
 Their brotherly assistance draws. Deane.

They would not go before the laws, but follow them; cher-ing their superiors, and embracing one another in brotherly piety and concord. Allyn.

4. BROTHERLY, adv. After the manner of a brother; with kindness and affection.

I speak but brotherly of him; but should I anatomize him to thee as he is, I must blush and weep, and thou look pale and wond'ring. Shakespeare.

BROUGHT, [participle passive of bring.]

The Turks, possessed with a needless fear, forebore the war, and could not, by any persuasions or threats of the captives, be brought on again to the assault. Lucie.

The influences brought by our author are but slender proofs.

BROW, n. f. [broc, broc, Saxon].

1. The arch of hair over the eye.

'Tis now the hour which all to rest allow,
 And sleep sits heavy upon every brow. Dryden.

2. The forehead.

She could have run, and waddled about;
 For even the day before she broke her brow. Shakespeare.

So we some antique hero's strength,
 Learn by his lance's weight and length;
 As these vast beams express the beast,
 Whole shady broves alive they dress. Wallis.

3. The general air of the countenance.

Then call them to our presence, face to face,
 And frowning brow to brow. Shakespeare.

Though all things foul would bear the broves of grace,
 Yet grace must look still so. Shakespeare.

4. The edge of any high place.

The cart, nothing dismayed, came forwards that day
 a little village, called Stoke, and there encamped that night.
 upon the brow or hanging of a hill. Bacon.

On the brow of the hill beyond that city, they were somewhat perplexed by elysing the French ambassador, with the king's coach, and others, attending him. Waller.

Then with fire, and hostile arms,
 Fearless assault; and, to the brow of heav'n
 Pursuing, drive them out from God and bliss. Milner.

7. BROW, v. a. [from the town.] To bound; to limit; to be at the edge of. Tennyson.

Tending my flocks hard by i' th' hilly crofts,
That brow this bottom glad. Milten.
To BROW-BEAT. v. a. [from brow and beat.] To depress with severe brows, and frown or lofty looks.
It is not for a magillate to frown upon, and brow-beat those who are hearty and exact in their ministry; and, with a grave, inimicable nod, to call a retolved zeal, want of prudence.

South.
What man will voluntarily expose himself to the imperious browbeatings and frowns of great men? L'Estrange.
Count Tairif endeavoured to browbeat the plaintiff, while he was speaking; but though he was not so imprudent as the count, he was every whit as surdy. Addison.
I will not be browbeaten by the supercilious looks of my adversaries, who now stand cheek by jowl with your worship.

Archaism and Pope's Mart. Scribble.
BROWBOUND. adj. [from brow and bound.] Crowned; having the head encircled with a diadem.

May alter nature in our browick crew. Suckling.
BROWN. adj. [brown, Saxon.] The name of a colour, compounded of black and any other colour.

Brown, in High Dutch, is called brun; in the Netherlands, brun; in French, couleur brune; in Italian, bruno; in Greek, χρῶμα αἰσθητόν, from the colour of the Ethiopians; for αἰσθη is to burn, and ωσ, a face; for that blackness, or swarthiness in their faces, is procured through heat. In Latin it is called fuscus, quasi ὅτι καυρῶν, that is, from darkening or overhadowing
the light; or of φωκῶν, which is to burn or scorch. Peacock.
I like the new wire within excellently, if the hair were a little brun. Shakespeare.

Thy palate then did deign
The roughest berry on the rudest hedge;
Yea, like the flag, when snow the pasture fleets,
The barks of trees thou brows'd'st. Shakespeare.

To BROWSE. v. n. To feed: it is used with the particle on.
They have scared away two of my best sheep; if any where
I have them, 'tis by the sea-side, browsing on ivy. Shakespeare.

A goat, hard prest, took sanctuary in a vineyard; so soon as he thought the danger over, he fell presently a browsing upon the leaves. L'Estrange.

Could eat the tender plant, and, by degrees,
Browse on the shrubs, and crop the budding trees. Blackm.

The Greeks were the defendants of savages, ignorant of agriculture, and browsing on herbage, like cattle. Archaism.

BROWSE. n. f. [from the verb.] Branches, or shrubs, fit for the food of goats, or other animals.

The greedy hounds the wolf pursues,
The wolf the kid, the wanton kid the browse. Dryden.

heavy blow of something not edged or pointed; to crush by any weight; to beat into groils powder; to beat together coarsely.

Fellows in arms, and my most loving friends,
Brui'd underneath the yoke of tyranny. Shakespeare.
And far far deeper in his head their stings,
Than temporal death shall bruise the victor's heel,
Or theirs whom he seduces. Par. Lost.

As in old chaos heav'n with earth confus'd,
And flars with rocks together crush'd and brui'd. Waller.
They beat their breasts with many a bruising blow,
Till they turn'd livid, and corrupt the snow. Dryden.

BRUISE. n. f. [from the verb.] A hurt with something blunt and heavy.

One arm'd with metal, th' other with wood,
This fit for bruise, and that for blood. Hadibras.

From the dry ground to spring, thy thirst t' allay
After the brunt of battle. Milten.

Faithful ministers are to stand and endure the brunt: a common soldier may fly, when it is the duty of him that holds the standard to die upon the place. South.

2. Blow; stroke.

A wicked ambush, which lay hidden long
In the close covert of her guileful eye,
Thence breaking forth, did thick about me throng,
Too feeble I t' abide the brunt so strong. Spenser.

'Tis the friendly rug prefer'd the ground,
And headlong knight from bruit or wound,
Like feathered betwixt a wall,
And heavy brunt of cannon-ball. Hadibras.

BRUSH. n. f. [brasse, Fr. from brascus, Lat.]

1. An instrument to clean any thing, by rubbing off the dirt or soil. It is generally made of bristles set in wood

- BUCKET, n. f. [bucket, Fr.]

1. The vessel in which water is drawn out of a well.
Now is this golden crown like a deep well,
That owes two buckets, filling one another;
The emptier ever dancing in the air,
The other down unseen, and full of water.
Shakespeare.

N XIX.

- Is the sea ever likely to be evaporated by the sun, or to be emptied with buckets?
Bentley.
2. The vessels in which water is carried, particularly to quench a fire.

- Now streets grow throng'd, and busy as by day,
Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire;
Some cut the pipes, and fume the engines play;
And fume, more bold, mount ladders to the fire.
Dryden.

- The porringers, that in a row
Hung high, and made a glittering show,
To a lea noble substance chang'd,
Were now but leathern buckets rang'd.
Swift.

- BUCKLE, n. f. [buwal, Welch, and the same in the Armorick tongue, Fr.]

1. A link of metal, with a tongue or catch made to fasten one thing to another.

- Fair lined slippers for the cold,
With buckles of the purest gold.
The chlamys was a sort of short cloak tied with a buckle, commonly to the right shoulder.
Shakespeare.
Three leaf-rings; which after, melted down,
Form'd a waist buckle for his widow's gown.
Pope.

2. The state of the hair crisped and curled, by being kept long in the same state.

- The greatest beau was dressed in a flaxen periwig; the wearer of it goes in his own hair at home, and let his wig lie in buckle for a whole half year.
Spectator.

- That live-long wig, which Gorgon's self might own,
Eternal buckle takes in 'arian stone.
Pope.

- To BUCKLE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with a buckle.
Like saphire, pearl, in rich embroidery,
Buckled below fair knight-hood's bending knee.
Shakespeare.

in it, and buckle them up close with a strap.
Swift.

2. To prepare to do any thing: the metaphor is taken from buckling on the armour.

- The Saracen, this hearing, rose amain,
And catching up in haste his three square shield,
And shining helmet, soon him buck'd to the field.
F. 2.

3. To join in battle.
The Lord Gray, captain of the men at arms, was forbidden to charge, until the foot of the avantguard were buckled with them in front.
Hayward.

4. To confine.
How brief the life of man
Runs his erring pilgrimage!
I hat the fletching of a span
Buckles in his fun of age.
Shakespeare.

- To BUCKLE, v. n. [bucklen, Germ.]

1. To bend; to bow.

- As the wretch, whose fever-weaken'd joints,
Like strengthless hinges, buckle under life,
Impatient of his fit, breaks like a fire
Out of his keeper's arms.
Shakespeare.

- Now a covetous old crafty knave,
At dead of night, shall raise his bone, and cry,
Turn out, you rogue! how like a beast you lie;
Go buckle to the law.
Dryden.

2. To buckle to. To apply to; to attend. See active, second sense.

- This is to be done in children, by trying them, when they are by laziness unbent, or by a occasion bent another way, and endeavouring to make them buckle to the thing proposed. Locke.

3. To buckle with. To engage with; to encounter.
For single combat, thou shalt buckle with me.
Shakespeare.

- Yet thou, they say, for marriage dost provide;
Is this an age to buckle with a brice?
Dryden.

- BUCKLER, n. f. [buckler, Welch; buckler, Fr.] A shield; a defensive weapon buckled on the arm.

- He took my arms, and, while I re'd my way,
Through troops of foes, which did our passage stay;
My buckler o'er my aged father call.
Dryden.

- Still fighting, still defending as I pass.

- This medal compliments the emperor in the same sense as the old Romans did their dictator Fabius, when they called him the buckler of Rome.
Addison.

- To BUCKLER, v. a. [from the noun.] To support: to defend.

- Fear not, sweet wench, they shall not touch thee, Kate;
I'll buckler thee against a million.

two rogues in buckram suits.
Shakespeare.

- BUCKRAMS, n. f. The same with will garlick. See GARLIC.

BUCKSHORN PLANTAIN. n. f. [coronopus, Lat. from the form of the leaf.] A plant.

It agrees in flower and fruit with the plantain; but its leaves are deeply cut in on the edges; whereas the leaves of the plantain are either entire, or but slightly indented. The species are four; 1. Garden buckethorn plantain, or harthorn, &c. The first species though entitled a garden plant, yet is found wild upon most commons, and barren heaths; where, from the poor nets of the soil, it appears to be very different from the garden kind, as being little more than a fourth part so large. This species was formerly cultivated in gardens as a salad herb, but, at present, is little regarded, and wholly disused. Miller.

BUCKTHORN. n. f. [rhamnus, Lat. supposed to be so called from buce, Sax. the belly.]

It hath a tunnel-shaped flower, consisting of one leaf, divided toward the top into four or five segments; out of the flower-cup rises the pointal, which becomes a soft roundish berry, very full of juice, inclosing four hard seeds. The species are, 1. Common purging buckethorn, and a white bark of thorn. 3. Buckethorn, with long spines, and a white bark of Montpellier. The first of these trees is very common in hedgerows; the berries of which are used in medicine, particularly for making a syrup, which was formerly in great use; with those of the buckethorn, or wholly substituted in their place; which mixture hath spoiled the syrup, and rendered it less wholesome. The buckethorn berries may be distinguished when they are right or not, by opening them, and observing the number of seeds in each; for their have commonly four. The second sort is less common in England. Both these sorts may be propagated, by laying down their tender branches in autumn. The first sort will grow to the height of eighteen or twenty feet; the second sort seldom rises above eight feet high. They may also be propagated by seeds. Miller.

BUCKWHEAT. n. f. [triticum, Germ. roggen, Lat.] The flowers grow in a spike, or branched from the wings of the leaves; the cup of the flower is divided into five parts, and three resembles the petals of a flower; the seeds are black, and three cornered. The species are, 1. Common upright bucketwheat. 2. Common creeping bucketwheat. The first is cultivated in England, and is a great improvement to dry barren lands. The second grows wild, and is seldom cultivated. Miller.

BUCKLE. adj. [βουκκαλα, from βουκαλ, a cowherd.] Pastoral.

BUD. n. f. [bouton, Fr.] The first shoot of a plant; a gem.

Be as thou wast wont to be

See as thou wast wont to see:

Dian's bud o'er Cupid's flower

Hath such force and blessed power.

Writers say, as the most forward bud

Is eaten by the canker ere it blow,

Even so by love the young and tender wit

Is turn'd to folly, blushing in the bud,

Losing his verdure even in the prime.

When you the flow'rs for Chloë twine,

Why do you to her garland join

The meanest bud that falls from mine?

Insects wound the tender bud, with a long hollow trunk, and deposit an egg in the hole, with a sharp corroding liquor, that causeth a swelling in the leaf, and closeth the orifice. Bentley.

TE BUD. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To put forth young shoots, or gems

Bud forth as a rule growing by the brook of the field. Ecc.

'Here the fruit, that was to be gathered from such a flux, quickly budded out. Clarendon.

Heav'n gave him all at one, then snatch'd away,

Ere mortals all his beauties could survey;

Just like that flower that buds and withers in a day. Dryd.

'Tho' lab'ring yokes on their own necks they fear'd,

And felt for budding hours on their smooth foreheads rear'd. Dryden's Silienus.

2. To be in the bloom, or growing.

Young budding virgin, fair and fresh and sweet,

Whither away, or where is thy abode? Shakspeare.

TE BUD. v. a. To inoculate; to graft by inserting a bud into the rind of another tree.

Of apricocks, the largest masculine is much improved by budding upon a peach stock. Temple.

TE BUDGE. v. n. [lougier, Fr.] To stir; to move off the place: a low word.

All your prisoners

In the lime grove, which weatherfends your cell,

'They cannot budge till your release. Shakspeare.

'The mouse ne'er stirs the cat, as they did budge

From ratsals worse than they. Shakspeare.

I thought th' hadst scorn'd to budge

For fear. Hudibras.

BUDGE. adj. [of uncertain etymology.] Surly; stiff; formal.

O foolishness of men! that lend their ears

To those vulgar doctors of the stocks. Milton.

BUDGE. n. f. The dressed skin or furs of lambs. Dict.

BUDGER. n. f. [from the verb.] One that moves or stirs from his place.

Let the first budger die the other's slave,

And the gods doom him after. Shakspeare.

BUDGET. n. f. [bogette, Fr.]

1. A bag, such as may be easily carried.

If tinkers may have leave to live,

And bear the fowling budget;

Then my account I well may give,

And in the flocks avouch it. Shakspeare.

Sir Robert Clifford, in whole bosom, or budget, most of Pekin's secrets were laid up, was come into England. Bacon.

His budget with corruptions cramm'd,

The contributions of the dame'd. Swift.

2. It is used for a store, or stock.

It was nature, in fine, that brought off the cat, when the fox's whole budget of inventions failed him. L'Estrange.

BUFF. n. f. [from buffalo.]

1. A sort of leather prepared from the skin of the buffalo; used for waist belts, pouches, &c.

A rosy chain of rheums, a visage rough,

Deform'd, unfeatur'd, and a skin of buff. Dryden.

2. The skins of elks and oxen dressed in oil, and prepared after the same manner as that of the buffalo.

3. A military coat made of thick leather, so that a blow cannot easily pierce it.

A fiend, a fury, pitiless and rough,

A wolf, nay worse, a fellow all in buff. Shakspeare.

TE BUFF. v. a. [buffe, Fr.] To strike: it is a word not in use.

There was a flock,

To have buff'd out the blood

From ought but a block. Bentley.

BUFFALO. n. f. [Ital.] A kind of wild ox.

Become th' unworthy browbe

Of buffaloes, fast goats, and hungry cows. Dryden.

BUFFET. n. f. [buffete, Ital.] A blow with the fist; a box on the ear.

O, I could divide myself, and go to buffets, for moving such a dish of skimmed milk with so honourable an action. Shakspeare.

A man that fortune's buffets and rewards

Hath ta'en with equal thanks. Shakspeare.

Go, buff'd coward, left I run upon thee,

And with one blow lay thy structure low. Milton.

Round his hollow temples, and his ears,

His buckler beats; the sun of Neptune slunn'd

With these repeated buffets, quits the ground. Dryden.

BUFFET. n. f. [buffete, Fr.] A kind of cupboard; or set of shelves, where plate is set out to shew, in a room of entertainment.

The rich buffet well-colour'd serpents grace,

And gaping Tritons spew to wash your face. Pope.

TE BUFFET. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike with the hand; to box; to beat.

Why woman, your husband is in his old lunes again; he so buffets himself on the forehead, crying, peer out, peer out! that any madness I ever yet beheld, seemed but tameness. Shakspeare.

Our ears are cudgell'd; not a word of his

But buffets better than a fist of France. Shakspeare.

'The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it

With lusty sinews; throwing it aside. Shakspeare.

Instantly I plung'd into the sea,

And, buffeting the billows to her rescue,

Redeem'd her life with half the loss of mine. Ormsby.

TE BUFFET. v. n. To play a boxing-match.

If I might buffet for my love, I could lay on like a butcher. Shakspeare.

BUFFETER. n. f. [from buffet.] A boxer; one that buffets.

BUFFLE. n. f. [buffle, Fr.] The fame with buffets; a wildness.

TE BUFFLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To puzzle; to be at a loss.

BUFFOON. n. f. [buffon, Fr.]

1. A man whose profession is to make sport, by low jests and antic postures; a jackingpund.

No prince would think himself greatly honoured, to have his proclamation cancelled on a publick stage, and become the sport of buffoons. Went.

2. A man that practices indecent raillery.

It is the nature of drolls and buffoons, to be insolent to those that will bear it, and slavish to others. L'Estrange.

The bold buffoon, when'er they tread the green,

Their motion mimicks, but with best obedience. Goth.

BUFFONERY. n. f. [from buffoon.]

1. The practice or art of a buffoon.

Courage, in an ill-bred man, has the air, and escapes not the opinion of brutality; learning becomes pedantry, and wit buffonery. Locke.

2. Low jests; ridiculous pranks; scurrile mirth. Dryden places the accent, improperly, on the first syllable.

Where publick ministers encourage buffonery, it is no wonder der if buffoons set up for publick ministers.

L'Estrange.

And whilst it lasts, let bug-injury succeed,
To make us laugh, for never was more need.

Dryden.

BUG. n. f. A flunking insect bred in old household stuff. In the following passages, wings are erroneously ascribed to it.

Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt, which flunks and flings.

Pope.

BUG. n. f. [It is derived by some from big, by others from bug, bug, in Welch, has the same meaning.] A frightful object; a walking spectre, imagined to be seen; generally now used for a false terror to frighten babes.

Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,
As ghally bug their hair on end does rear,

Yet both do strive their fearfulness to feign.

Fairy Queen.

Sir, spare your threats;
The bug which you would fright me with, I feck.

Shakespeare.

Hail not sleep to-night? would he not, naughty man, let it sleep? a bug-eat take him.

Shakespeare.

We have a horror for uncouth monsters; but, upon custom and experience, all these bugs grow familiar and easy to us.

L'Estrange.

Such bugbear thoughts, once got into the tender minds of children, sink deep, so as not easily, if ever, to be got out again.

Locke.

To the world, no bugbear is so great,
As want of figure, and a small estate.

Pope.

BUGGINESS. n. f. [from buggy.] Being infected with bugs.

BUGGY. adj. [from bug.] Abounding with bugs.

BUGLE. n. f. [from bugen, Sax. to bend, Stinner; from buglenorn, brunela, Lat. a heiler, Junius; from bugles, the bonafus, Lyc.] A hunting horn.

Then took that squire an horny bugle small,
Which hung adown his side in twisted gold,

And tassels gay.

Fairy Queen.

That I will have a recheate winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an inevitable baldrick, all women shall pardon me.

Shakespeare.

He gave his buglehorn a blast,
That through the woodland echo'd far and wide.

Tickell.

BUGLE. n. f. A shining bead of black glass.

Bugle bracelets, necklace amber,
Perfum'd for a lady's chamber.

Shakespeare.

'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eyeballs, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entame my spirits to your worship.

Shakespeare.

BUGLE. n. f. [from bugle, Lat.] A plant.

It hath a flower consisting of one leaf, divided into three parts; out of the flower-cup arises the pointal, fixed like a nail, attended by four embryos, which become so many oblong seeds, shut up in a hulk; the flowers are placed in whorles round the stalk. The species are, 1. Common bugle. 2. The greatest bugle of the Alps. 3. Hairy eastern bugle, with an inverted blue flower, spotted with white. 4. Eastern bugle, with a purplish violet coloured flower, &c. The first and second sorts grow wild in moist woods and meadows, and continue in flower from May to September. The bugle is greatly esteemed as a vulnerary herb, and is used both externally and internally. They are very hardy plants, and propagate greatly by their trailing stalks.

Miller.

t. To raise from the ground; to make a fabric, or an edifice.

Thus faith the Lord, thou shalt not build me an house to dwell in.

Hosier.

When usurers tell their gold in the field,
And whores and bawds do churches build.

Shakespeare.

When the head-dress was built up in a couple of cones and spires, which stood so excessively high on the side of the head, that a woman, who was but a pigmy without her head-dress, appeared like a colossus upon putting it on.

Spectator.

To build, to plant, whatever you intend,
To rear the columns, or the arch to bend.

Pope.

t. To raise any thing on a support or foundation.

Love built on beauty, soon as beauty dies;
Choose this face, chang'd by no deformities.

Dwone.

I would endeavour to destroy those curious, but groundless structures, that men have built up of opinions alone.

Boyle.

To BUILD, v. n. To depend on; to rest on.

By a man's authority, we here understand the force which his word hath for the assurance of another's mind, that build on him.

Hosier.

Some build rather upon the abusing of others, and putting trust upon them, than upon foundations of their own proceedings.

Bacon.

Even those who had not tasted of your favours, yet built so much on the fame of your beneficence, that they demeaned the loss of their expectations.

This is certainly a much surer way, than to build on the interpretations of an author, who does not consider how the ancients used to think.

Dryden.

Addison.

BUILDER. n. f. [from build.] He that builds; an architect.

But fore-accounting oft makes builders miss;
When they found, they felt, they had no leafe of bliss.

Sidney.

When they, which had seen the beauty of the first temple built by Solomon, beheld how far it excelled the second, which had not builders of like abilities, the tears of their grieved eyes the prophets endeavoured, with comforts, to wipe away.

Hosier.

Mark'd out for such an use, as if 'twere meant
To invite the builder, and his choice prevent.

Drombam.

Her wings with lengthen'd honour let her spread,
And, by her greatness, shew her builder's fame.

Prior.

BUILDING. n. f. [from build.] A fabric; an edifice.

Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
Have cost a mass of publick treasury.

Shakespeare.

View not this spire by measure giv'n
To buildings; rais'd by common hands;

That fabric rises high as heav'n,
Whose basis on devotion stands.

Prior.

Among the great variety of ancient coins which I saw at Rome, I could not but take particular notice of such as relate to any of the buildings or statues that are still extant.

Addison.

BUILT. n. f. [from build.] The form; the structure.

As is the built, so different is the fight;
Their mounting thill is on our sails design'd;

Dryden.

Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find.

Dryden.

There is hardly any country, which has so little shipping as Ireland; the reason must be, the scarcity of timber proper for this built.

Temple.

BULB. n. f. [bulbus, Lat.] A round body, or root.

Take up your early autumnal tulips, and bulbs, if you will remove them.

1. A stupid fellow; a blockhead.

2. The name of a fish.

The miller's thumb, or bull-head, is a fish of no pleasing shape; it has a head big and flat, much greater than suitable to its body; a mouth very wide, and usually gaping; it is without teeth, but his lips are very rough, much like a file; he hath two fins near to his gills, which are roundish or crested; two fins under his belly, two on the back, one below the vent, and the fin of his tail is round. Nature hath painted the body of this fish with whitish, blackish, brownish spots. They are usually full of spawn all the summer, which swells their vents in the form of a dog. The bull-head begins to spawn in April; in winter we know no more what becomes of them than of eels or swallows. Phillips's World of Words.

3. A little black water vermin.

BULL-TROUT. n. f. A kind of trout.

It here is, in Northumberland, a trout called a bull-trout, of a much greater length and bigness than any in these northern parts. Warton.

BULL-WEED. n. f. The same with knopweed, which see.

BULL-WORT. or BISHOP'S-WEED. n. f. [ammi, Latin.] An umbelliferous plant with small striated seeds; the petals of the flowers are unequal, and shaped like a heart. Its seeds are used in medicine. Müller.

BULLACE. n. f. A wild dog plum. See PLUM.

In October, and the beginning of November, come services, medallars, bullaces; roses cut or removed, to come late; hollyhocks, and such like. Bacon.

BULLET. n. f. [bullet, Fr.] A round ball of metal, usually shot out of guns.

As when the devilish iron engine wrought
 In deepell hell, and fram'd by furies skill,
 With windy nitre and quick sulphur fraught,
 And tamm'd with bullet round, ordain'd to kill. Speyer.

Crisper, their leader, desperately fighting amongst the foremost of the janizaries, was at once shot with two bullets, and slain. Knight.

And as the bullets, so different is the fight;
 Their mounting shot is on our sails design'd:
 Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light.

And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dryden.

BULLION. n. f. [bullion, Fr.] Gold or silver in the lump; unwrought, uncoined.

The balance of trade must of necessity be returned in coin or bullion. Bacon.

A second multitude,
 With wondrous art, found out the massy ore,
 Saverer each kind, and cumm'd the bullion drose. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Bullion is silver whose workmanship has no value. And thus foreign coin hath no value here for its stamp, and our coin is bullion in foreign dominions. Lalor.

In every vessel there is stowage for immense treasures, when the cargo is pure bullion. Adrian.

BULLION. n. f. [from bullion, Lat.] The act or state of being.

There is to be observed in these dissolutions, which will not easily in importance, what the effects are, as the bullion, the precipitation to the bottom, the exhalation towards the top, the suspension in the middle, and the like. Bacon.

BULLOCK. n. f. [from bull.] A young bull.

Why, that's spoken like an honest drover: so they fell bullocks. Shakespeare.

Some drive the herds; here the fierce bullock scorns
 Th' appointed way, and runs with threat'ning horns. Craze.

Until the transportation of cattle into England was prohibited, the quickest trade of ready money here was driven by the sale of young bullocks. Tong.

BULLY. n. f. [Silvius derives this word from bulis, as a corruption in the pronunciation; which is very probably right: or from bulis, or bul-gel, which are less probable. May it not come from bulle, the pope's letter, implying the influence of those who came invested with authority from the papal court.]

A noisy, blustering, quarrelling fellow: it is generally taken for a man that has only the appearance of courage.

Mine host of the garner.—What says my bully next? Speak bully, now. Shakespeare.

Sholarly and wisely.

On all a sudden the doors flew open, and in comes a crew of roaring bullies, with their wench's, their dogs, and their bottles. L'Estrange.

'Tis so ridiculous, but so true withal,
 A bully cannot sleep without a brawl.
 A scolding hen it is, at the worst, a more tolerable character than a bully in petticoats. Adrian.

The little man is a bully in his nature, but, when he grows choleric, I confine him till his wrath is over.

To BULLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To overbear with noise or menaces. King.

Prentices, parish clerks, and hectors meet,
 He that is drunk, or bully'd, pays the treat.

To BULLY. v. n. To be noisy and quarrelsome.

BULL-RUSH. n. f. [from bull and rush.] A large rush, such as bull-rush. 5

grows in rivers, without knots; though Dryden has given it the epithet lusty, confounding it, probably, with the reed.

To make fine cages for the nightingale,
And baskets of bulwarks, was my wont. Spenser.
All my praises are but as a bulwark cast upon a stream; they are born up by the strength of the current. Dryden.

The edges were with bending others crown'd;
The inert bulwark next in order stood,
And all within of reeds a trembling wood. Dryden.

BULWARK. n. f. [bulwark, Dutch; probably only from its strength and largeness.]

1. A fortification; a citadel.
But him the figure made quickly to retreat,
Encountering fierce with single sword in hand,
And twist him and his lord did like a bulwark stand. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

Who oft repair
Their earthen bulwarks 'gainst the ocean flood. Fairfax.
Taking away needful bulwarks, divers were demolished upon the sea coasts. Hoyward.

We have bulwarks round us;
Within our walls are troops enur'd to toil. Addison.
Our naval strength is a general bulwark to the British nation. Addison's Favourite, No 42.

2. A security.
Some making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Shakspeare.
BULWARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To fortify; to strengthen with bulwarks.

And yet no bulwark'd town, or distant coast,
Preserves the beauteous youth from being seen. Addison.
BUM. n. f. [bummer, Dutch.]

1. The buttocks; the part on which we sit.
The wisest ant tell the bumble tale,
S' meime for threefoot stool milkath me,
Then slip I from her bum, down topples she. Shakspeare.

This laid, he gently rais'd the knight,
And let him on his bum upright. Hudibras.
From dully shuns neglected authors come,
Mistakes of plays, and relics of the bum. Dryden.

The carnal Sylenham does not doubt,
But profound thought will bring the gout;
And that with bum on couch we lie,
Because our reason's board too high. W—n.

2. It is used, in composition, for any thing mean or low, as bumbling.

BUMBLIFF. n. f. [from bum and bliff.] A bailiff of the meanest kind; one that is employed in arrests.

O, Sir Andrew, flout me for him at the corner of the orchard, like a bumbliff. Shakspeare.
BUMBERD. n. f. [wrong written for bumbar; which see.] A great gun; a great barrel.

Yond fane black cloud, yond huge one looks Like a foul bumbar, that would fild his liquor. Shakspeare's Tempest.

BUMBEAST. n. f. [falsely written for bumble; the etymology of which I am now very doubtful of; bumble and bumble being mentioned, with great probability, by Junius, as coming from bum, a tree, and beast, silk; the silk or cotton of a tree.]

1. A cloth made by sewing one stuff upon another; patchwork.
The usual bumble of black bits sewed into ermine, our English women are made to think very fine. Grew.

2. Linen stuffed with cotton; fluffing.
We have received your letters full of love,
And, in our maiden council, rated them
As courtship, pleasant jest, and courtship,
As bumble, and as lining to the time. Shakspeare.

BUM. n. f. [perhaps from bum, as being prominent.] A swelling; a protuberance.

It had upon its brow a bum as big as a young cockle's beak; a peevish knob, and it cried bitterly. Shakspeare.

Not though his teeth are beaten out, his eyes
Hang by a string, in bums his forehead rise. Dryden.

BUMPT. v. a. [from bumpt, Lat.] To make a loud noise, or to bang. [See BUMPT.] It is applied, I think, only to the bittern.
Then to the water's brink he laid her head,
And as a bittern bumpt within a reed,
To thee alone, O lake, she said. Dryden.

BUMPER. n. f. [from bumper.] A cup filled till the liquor swells over the brims.

Place us the delight
All day in playing bumper, and at night
Reels to the bawds. Dryden's Juvenal.

BUMPTIN. n. f. [This word is of uncertain etymology; bumptin derives it from bumptin, a kind of worthless guard, or mound. This seems harsh. Bump is used amongst us for a knob, or lump; may not bumptin be much the same with cabaret, legz-head, kick, and blackhead.] An awkward heavy rubick; a country lout.

The poor bumptin, that had never seen nor heard of such delights before, blessed herself at the change of her condition. L'Estrange's Fables.

N. XIX.

A heavy bumptin, taught with daily care,
Can never dance three steps with a becoming air. Dryden.

In his white cloak the magistrate appears.
The country bumptin the same livery wears. Dryden.

It was a favour to admit them to breeding; they might be ignorant bumptins and clowns, if they pleased. Lake.

BUMPKINLY. adj. [from bumptin.] Having the manners or appearance of a clown; clownish.

He is a simple, blundering, and yet conceited fellow, who, aiming at description, and the rustic wonderful, gives an air of bumptinly romance to all he tells. Clarissa.

BUNCH. n. f. [buncher, Danish, the crags of the mountains.]

1. A hard lump; a knob.
They will carry their treasures upon the buncher of camels, to a people that shall not profit them. Job. xxx. 6.
He felt the ground, which he had wont to find even and soft, to be grown so hard with little round balls or bunchers, like hard boiled eggs. Byle.

2. A cluster; many of the same kind growing together.
Vines, with clust ring buncher growing. Shakspeare.
Titian said, that he knew no better rule for the distribution of the lights and shadows, than his observation drawn from a bunch of grapes. Dryden.

For thee, large bunches load the bending vine,
And the last blessings of the year are thine. Dryden.

3. A number of things tied together.
And on his arms a bunch of keys he bore. Fairy Queen.
All? I know not what ye call all; but if I fought not with fifty of them, I am a bunch of rath. Shakspeare.

Ancient Janus, with his double face,
And bunch of keys, the porter of the place. Dryden.
The mother's bunch of keys, or any thing they cannot hurt themselves with, serves to divert little children. Lake.

4. Any thing bound into a knot.
Upon the top of all his lofty crest,
A bunch of hairs discover'd diversely,
With sprinkled pearl and gold full richly dress'd. Spenser.

BUNCHED. v. a. [from the noun.] To be well set in a bunch; to grow out in protuberances.
It has the resemblance of a large bunch of hair before it is opened, bunching out into a large round knob. Woodward's on Fossils.

BUNCHBACKED. adj. [from bunch and back.] Having bunches on the back.

I he day shall come, that thou shalt wish for me,
To help thee curb t'is poisonous bunchbacked toad. Shakspeare.

TO BUNGLE. v. a. [See BUNGLER.] To perform clumsily.
When men want light,
They make but bungling work. Dryden.

Letters to me are not seldom opened, and then sealed in a bungling manner before they come to my hands. Swift.

TO BUNGLER. v. a. To bungle; to manage clumsily; to conduct awkwardly.

Other devils, that suggest by-tresfons
Do botch and bungle up damnation,
With patches, colours, and with forms being fetcht
From glitt'ring temblances of piety. Shakspeare.

They

They make lame mischief, though they mean it well :
 Their int'rest is not finely drawn, and hid, Dryden.
 But beams are coarsely lungh'd up, and feen.
BU'NGLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A botch; an awkwardness;
 an inaccuracy; a clumsy performance.
 Errors and bungles are committed, when the matter is inapt or contumacious. Roy on the Creation.
BU'NGLER. n. f. [bungler, Welch; g. bungler, i. e. the last or lowest of the profession Darwin.] A bad workman; a clumsy performer; a man without skill.
 Painters, at the mill, were such bunglers, and so rude, that, when they drew a cow or a hog, they were fain to write over the head what it was; otherwise the beholder knew not what to make of it. Peculum on Drawing.
 Hard features every bungler can command;
 To draw true beauty shews a master's hand Dryden.
 A bungler thus, who force the nail can hit,
 With driving wrong will make the pannel split. Swift.
BU'NGLINGLY. adv. [from bungling.] Clumsily; awkwardly.

pear to be full of goodness. Tillotson.

If we do but put virtue and vice in equal circumstances, the advantages of ease and pleasure will be found to be on the side of religion. Tillotson.

The mischiefs or harms that come by play, inadvertency, or ignorance, are not at all, or but very gently, to be taken notice of. Locke on Education.

If a reader examines Horace's art of poetry, he will find but very few precepts in it, which he may not meet with in Aristotle. Addison.

Prepar'd I stand: he was but born to try

The lot of man, to suffer and to die. Pope.

5. Than.

The full moon was no sooner up, and shining in all its brightness, but he privately opened the gate of paradise. Gaudin.

6. But that; without this consequence that.

Frosts that constrain the ground,

Do seldom their usurping power withdraw,

But raging floods pursue their hasty hand. Dryden.

7. Otherwise than that.

It cannot be but nature hath some director, of infinite power, to guide her in all her ways. Holzer.

Who shall believe,

But you misuse the reverence of your place? Shakespeare.

8. Not otherwise than.

A genius so elevated and unconfined as Mr. Cowley's, was but necessary to make Pindar speak English. Dryden.

9. By any other means than.

Out of that will I cause those of Cyprus to mutiny: whose qualification shall come into no true taste again, but by trans-planting of Cassio. Shakespeare.

10. If it were not for this; if this were not.

Believe me, I had rather have lost my purse

Full of cruzades. And, but my noble Moor

Is true of mind, and made of no such baseness,

As jealous creatures are, it were enough

To put him to ill-thinking. Shakespeare.

I here do give thee that with all my heart,

Which thou hast already, with all my heart

I would keep from thee. Shakespeare.

11. However; howbeit.

I do not doubt but I have been to blame;

But, to pursue the end for which I came,

Unite your subjects first, then let us go,

And pour their common rage upon the foe. Dryden.

12. It is used after no doubt, no question, and such words, and signifies the same with that. It sometimes is joined with that.

They made do account, but that the navy should be absolutely master of the seas. Bacon.

I fancied to myself a kind of ease in the change of the paroxysm; never suspecting but that the humour would have walk'd itself. Dryden.

There is no question but the king of Spain will reform most of the abuses. Addison.

13. That. This seems no proper sense in this place.

It is not therefore imp-able, but I may alter the complexion of my play, to restore myself into the good graces of my fat criticks. Dryden.

14. Otherwise than.

I should sin

To think but nobly of my grandmother. Shakespeare.

15. Even; not longer ago than.

Berow but now I left; whom, pin'd with pain,

Her age and anguish from these rites detain. Dryden.

It is evident, in the instance I gave but now, the confusion went along. Locke.

16. A particle by which the meaning of the foregoing sentence is bounded or restrained.

Thus fights Ulysses, thus his fame extends,

A formidable man, but to his friends. Dryden.

17. An objective particle; yet it may be objected.

But yet, madam—

I do not like but yet; it does allay

The good precedence; he upon but yet!

But yet is as a jaylour, to bring forth

Some monstrous malefactor. Shakespeare.

Must the heart then have been formed and continued, before the blood was in being? But here again, the substance of the heart itself is most certainly made and nourished by the blood, which is conveyed to it by the coronary arteries. Bur-

18. But for; without; had not this been.

Rath man! forbear, but for some unbelief,

My joy had been as fatal as my grief. Waller.

But for her native ornament of hair,

Which in a simple knot was ty'd above. Dryden.

When the fair boy receiv'd the gift of right,

And, but for mischief, he had dy'd for spite. Dryden.

BUT. n. f. [but, French.] A boundary.

But, if I ask you what I mean by that word, you will answer, Bayle.

So, while my lov'd revenge is full and high,
I'll give you back your kingdom by the by.
Dryden's Conquest of Granada.

By, in composition, implies something out of the direct way; and, consequently, some obscurity, as a by-read, something irregular, as a by-end; or something collateral, as a by-consequence; or private, as a by-law. This composition is used at pleasure, and will be understood by the examples following.

By-coffeehouse. n. f. A coffeehouse in an obscure place.
I afterwards entered a by-coffeehouse, that stood at the upper end of a narrow lane, where I met with a nonjuror.

Addive, Spectator.

C The third letter of the alphabet, has two sounds; one like c, as, call, clock, craft, crab, companion, caneism; the other as s, as, Cesar, cessation, cinder. It sounds like c before a, e, u, or a consonant; and like s, before i, and y.

CAB. n. f. [2p.] A Hebrew measure, containing about three pints English, or the eighteenth part of the ephah.

CABA'L. n. f. [cabal, Fr. cabale, tradition.]

1. The secret science of the Hebrew rabbins.

2. A body of men united in some close design. A cabal differs from a party, as few from many.

She often interposed her royal authority, to break the cabals which were forming against her first ministers. Addison.

3. Intrigue.

When each, by curs'd cabals of women, strove

To draw th' indulgent king to partial love. Dryden.

To CABA'L. v. n. [cabaler, Fr.] To form close intrigues; to intrigue; to unite in small parties.

His mournful friends, summon'd to take their leaves,

Are throng'd about his couch, and sit in council:

What those caballing captains may design,

I must prevent, by being first in action. Dryden.

CABALIST. n. f. [from cabal.] One skilled in the traditions of the Hebrews.

Then Jove thus spake: With care and pain

We form'd this name, renowned in rhyme,

Not thine, immortal Neufgermain! Swiss.

CABALLISTICAL. adj. [from cabal.] Something that has an occult meaning.

The letters are caballistical, and carry more in them than it is proper for the world to be acquainted with. Addison.

He taught him to repeat two caballistical words, in pronoun-cing of which the whole secret consisted. Spettator.

CABALLER. n. f. [from cabal.] He that engages in close de-sings; an intriguer.

Factions and rich, bold at the council board,

For cautious in the field, he shun'd the sword; } Dryden.

A close caballer, and tongue valiant loud. }

CABALLINE. adj. [caballinus, Lat.] Belonging to a horse; as, caballine aloes, or horse aloes.

CABARET. n. f. [French.] A tavern.

Suppose this servant passing by some cabaret, or tennis-court, where his comrades were drinking or playing, should stay with them, and drink or play away his money. Etienne.

CABBAGE. n. f. [caulus, Fr. brassica, Lat.] A plant.

The leaves are large, fleshy, and of a glaucous colour; the flowers consist of four leaves, which are succeeded by long taper pericarpia, containing several round acid seeds. The species are,

1. The common white cabbage. 2. The red cabbage. 3.

The Russian cabbage. 4. The flat-headed cabbage. 5. The sugar loaf cabbage. 6. The early Battersea cabbage. 7. The white Savoy cabbage. 8. The green Savoy cabbage. 9. The brussels. 10. The green brussels. 11. The Italian brussels.

12. The turnep-rooted cabbage. 13. The cauliflower. 14.

The turnep cabbage. 15. Cured cabbage. 16. The musk cabbage. 17. Branching tree cabbage, from the sea coast. 18.

Brown brussels. 19. Common cauliflower. 20. Perennial

Alpine cauliflower. 21. Perfoliated wild cabbage, with a white flower. 22. Perfoliated cabbage, with a purple flower. The common white, red, flat, and long-sided cabbages, are chiefly cultivated for winter use; the heads of which must be sown in the middle of March, in beds of good firm earth. The Russian ca bage was formerly in much greater esteem than at present, and is rarely brought to the market. The early Battersea and sugar-loaf cabbages, are called Michalmas ca bages; the season for sowing them is in the middle of July, in an open spot of ground. The Savoy cabbages are propagated for winter use, as being generally esteemed the best, when punched by frost.

The brussels is never eaten till the frost has rendered it tender.

The turnep cabbage was formerly more cultivated in England than at present; and scarce esteem'd this kind nor soups, but it is generally too strong, and seldom good, except in hard winters.

The cured cabbage is more generally esteemed, and is fit for use after Christmas, and continues good until April. The musk cabbage has, through negligence, been almost lost in England, though, for eating, it is one of the best kinds we have;

C A B

for it is always looser, and the leaves more crisp and tender, and has a most agreeable musky scent when cut. It will be fit for use in October, November, and December. The branching sea cabbage is found wild in England, and on the sea coast, and is sometimes gathered by the poor inhabitants in the spring, and eaten; but it is apt to be firing and bitter. The brusa brussels is by many esteemed, though it does not deserve a place in the kitchen garden, where the Roman brussels can be obtained, which is much sweeter, and will continue longer in season. The Roman brussels has large heads, which appear in the center of the plants like clusters of buds. The heads should be cut before they run up to seed, with about four or five inches of the stems; the skin of these stems should be stripped off, before they are boiled; they will eat very tender, and little inferior to asparagus. The common cauliflower is now almost lost near London, where their markets are usually supplied with cabbage or Savoy plants instead of them; which,

being tenderer and more delicate, are better worth cultivating.

The perennial Alpine cauliflower is also little cultivated at present.

The other two sorts of wild cabbage are varieties fit for a botanical garden, but are plants of no use. The cauliflower share, of late years, been so far improved in England, as to exceed,

in goodness and magnitude, what are produced in most parts of Europe; and, by the skill of the gardeners, are continued for several months together; but the most common season for them is in May, June, and July. Misc.

Cole, cabbage, and coleworts, which are soft and demulcent, without any acidity; the jelly, or juice, of red cabbage, baked in an oven, and mixed with honey, is an excellent pectoral.

Artusius on Aimetus.

To CA'BUDGE. v. a. [a cant word among taylors.] To flail in cutting clothes.

Your tailor, instead of shreds, 'ca'bages' whole yards of cloth. Artusius's History of J. Ball.

CA'BUDGE TREE. n. f. A species of palm-tree; which is very common in the Caribbee islands, where it grows to a prodigious height. The leaves of this tree envelope each other, so that those which are inclosed, being deprived of the air, are blanched; which is the part the inhabitants cut for plaits for hats, &c. and the genuine, or young shoots, are pickled, and sent into England by the name of cabbage; but whenever this part is cut out, the trees are destroyed; nor do they rise again from the old roots; so that there are very few trees left remaining near plantations, except for ornament; for their stems being exceeding straight, and their leaves being produced very regularly at top, will afford a most beautiful prospect; for which reason, the planters generally spare two or three of them near their habitations. Misc.

CA'BUDGE-WORM. n. f. An insect.

CABIN. n. f. [cabana, Fr. chambre, Welch, a cottage.]

1. A small room.

So long in secret *ca*bin there he held

Her captive to his sensual desire,

Till that with timely fruit her belly swell'd,

And bore a boy unto a savage fire. Fairy Queen.

2. A small chamber in a ship.

Give thanks you have lived so long, and make yourself ready, in your *ca*bin, for the mischance of the hour, if it so happen. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Men may not expect the use of many cabins, and safety at once, in the sea service. Roderick.

The chestboard, we say, is in the same place it was, if it remain in the same part of the *ca*bin, in, though, perhaps, the ship

it is in, sails all the while. Lucas.

3. A cottage, or small house.

Come from marble bow'rs, many times the gay harbour of anguish,

Unto a silly *ca*bin, though weak, yet stronger against woe. Shakspeare.

Neither should that odious custom be allowed, of flaying off the green surface of the ground, to cover their cabins, or make up their dishes. Lucas.

4. A tent.

Some of green boughs their slender cabins frame,
Some lodged were Tortosa's streets about. Fairfax.

To CABIN, v. n. [from the noun.] To live in a cabin.

I'll make you feed on berries and on roots,
And feed on curds and whey, and suck the goat,
And cabin in a cave. Shakespeare.

To CABIN, v. n. To confine in a cabin.

Fleance is 'kapt':

Then comes my fit again; I had else been perfect;

Whole as the marble, founded as the rock;

As broad and general as the casing air;

But now I'm cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in,

To fussy doubts and fears. Shakespeare.

CABINED, adj. [from cabin.] Belonging to a cabin.

The nice morn, on the Indian sleep,

From her cabin'd loophole peep. Milton.

CABINET, n. f. [cabinet, Fr.]

1. A set of boxes or drawers for curiosities; a private box.

At both corners of the further side, by way of return, let there be two delicate or rich cabinets, daintily paved, rich hanged, glazed with crystalline glass, and a rich cupola in the midst, and all other elegance that may be thought on. Bacon.

Who fees a soul in such a body fet,

Might love the treasure for the cabinet. Ben. Jonson.

In vain the workman shew'd his wit,

With rings and hinges counterfeited,

To make it seem, in this disguise,

A cabinet to vulgar eyes. Swift.

2. Any place in which things of value are hidden.

I by breast hath ever been the cabinet,

Where I have lock'd my secrets. Dryden.

We cannot discourse of the secret, but by describing our duty; but so much duty must needs open a cabinet of mystery. Taylor.

3. A private room in which consultations are held.

You began in the cabinet what you afterwards practised in the camp. Dryden.

4. In specie it seems to signify a hut, or house.

Hearken awhile in thy green cabin,

The laurel song of careful Colinet. Pastorals.

CABINET-COUNCIL, n. f. A council held in a private manner, with unusual privacy and confidence.

The doctrine of Italy, and practice of France, in some kings times, hath introduced cabinet-councils. Bacon.

From the highest to the lowest it is universally read; from the cabinet-council to the nursery. Gay.

CABINET-MAKER, n. f. [from cabinet and make.] One that makes small nice work in wood.

'Tis root of an old white thorn will make very fine boxes and combs; so that they would be of great use for the cabinet-makers, as well as the turners, and others. Mortimer.

CABLE, n. f. [cabl, Welch; cabel, Dutch.] The great rope of a ship to which the anchor is fastened.

What though the mast be now blown overboard,
The cable broke, the halving anchor loof,
And half our sailors frowl'd in the flood,

Yet lives our pilot still? Shakespeare.

True it is, that the length of the cable is the life of the ship in all extremities; and the reason is, because it makes so many bendings and waves, as the ship, riding at that length, is not able to stretch it; and nothing breaks that is not stretched. Raleigh's Essays.

The cables crack, the sailors fearful cries

Afrend; and fable night involves the skies. Dryden.

CABUS, n. f. Small ropes used in ships. Dict.

CACAO. See CHOCOLATE.

CACHETICAL, adj. [from cachet.] Having an ill habit of CACHETICK, body; shewing an ill habit.

Young and florid blood, rather than rapid and cachetrical. Arbutnot in Air.

The crude chyle swims in the blood, and appears as milk in the blood, let out of some persons who are generally cachetick. Fleur.

CACHEXY, n. f. [καχξία.] A general word to express a great variety of symptoms; most commonly it denotes such a distemperature of the humours, as hinders nutrition, and weakens the vital and animal functions, proceeding from weakness of the fibres, and an abuse of the non-naturals, and often from severe acute dysentery. Arbutnot.

CACHINATION, n. f. [cachinnatio, Lat.] A loud laughter. D.

CACKLE, n. f. A fifth, said to make those who eat it laxative.

To CACKLE, v. n. [laelen, Dutch.]

1. To make a noise as a goose

The nightingale, if she should sing by day,

When every goose is cackling, would be thought

No better a musician than the wren. Shakespeare.

Goose, if I had you upon Sarum plains,

I'd drive thee cackling home to Camelot. Shakespeare.

Or rob the Roman geese of all their glories,

And save the state, by cackling to the tories. Pope.

2. Sometimes it is used for the noise of a hen.

Nº XX.

Now to my story I return again:

The trembling widow, and her daughters twain,
This woful cackling cry, with horror heard,
Of those distracted damfels in the yard. Dryden.

3. To laugh; to giggle.

Then Nic. grinned, cackled, and laughed, till he was like to kill himself, and seemed to be so pleased, that he fell a frisking and dancing about the room. Arbutnot.

CACKLE, n. f. [from the verb.] The voice of a goose or fowl.

The silver goose before the shining gate

There flew, and, by her cackle, sav'd the state. Dryden.

CACKLER, n. f. [from cackle.]

1. A fowl that cackles.

2. A tattler.

CACOCYMICAL, adj. [from cacochymy.] Having the hu-

CACOCYMIC, adj. mours corrupted.

It will prove very advantageous, if only cacochymick, to clarify his blood with a laxative. Harvey.

If the body be cacochymical, the tumours are apt to degenerate into very venomous and malignant abscesses. Wifeman.

The ancient writers distinguished putrid fevers, by putrefaction of blood, choler, melancholy, and phlegm; and this is to be explained by an effluence happening in a figure cacochymical blood.

CACOCYMY, n. f. [κακοχυμία.] A depravation of the humours from a sound state, to what the physicians call by a general name of a cacochymy. Spots, and discolorations of the skin, are signs of weak fibres; for the lateral vessels, which lie out of the road of circulation, let gross humours pass, which could not, if the vessels had their due degree of stricture. Arbutnot.

Strong beer, a liquor that attributes the better half of its ill qualities to the hops, consisting of an acrimonious fiery nature, sets the blood, upon the least cacochymy, into an orgasmus, by an ill ferment. Harvey.

CACOPHONY, n. f. [κακοφωνία.] A bad sound of words.

To CACUMINATE, v. a. [cacumino, Lat.] To make sharp or pyramidal. Dict.

CADAVEROUS, adj. [cadaverus, Lat.] Having the appearance of a dead carcass; having the qualities of a dead carcass.

In vain do they struggle to approach the dead, who livingly are cadaverous, for fear of any outward pollution, whose temper pollutes themselves. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The urine, long detained in the bladder, as well as glass, will grow red, fœtid, cadaverous and alkaline. The case is the same with the stagnant waters of hydropical persons. Arbutnot in Aimenti.

CA'ODDS, n. f.

1. A kind of tape or ribbon.

He hath ribbons of all the colours of the rainbow; inkles, caddises, cambricks, lawns; why, he hugs them over as if they were gods and goddesses. Shakespeare.

2. A kind of worm or grub found in a case of straw.

He especially loves the mayfly, which is bred of the cod-worm, or caddis; and these make the trout bold and lusty. Waller's Angler.

CADRE, n. f. [It is deduced, by Stimmer, from cadere, Fr. an old word, which signifies to breed up tenderly. I am; soft; delicate; as a cadre lamb, a lamb bred at home.

To CAOGE, v. a. [from the noun.] To breed up in softness.

CADRE, n. f. [cadre, Lat.] A barrel.

We join Cadre, so termed of our supposed father—or rather of stealing a cade of herrings. Shakespeare.

Soon as thy liquor from the narrow cells

Of close press'd hulks is freed, thou must refrain

Thy thirstily soul; let none persuade to broach

Thy thick, unwholesome, undigested cadre. Philips.

CADZ-WORM, n. f. The same with caddis.

CADZEVY, n. f. [cadetiv, Fr.]

1. Fall; state of sinking; decline.

Now was the sun in western cadence low

From noon; and gentle airs, due at their hours

To fan the earth, now wak'd. Milton.

2. The fall of the voice.

The sliding, in the close or cadence, hath an agreement with the figure in rhetoric, which they call preter expirationem; for there is a pleasure even in being deceived. Bacon.

There be words not made with lungs;

Sententious show'th! O! let them fall,

Their cadence is rhetorical. Cresswell.

3. The flow of verses, or periods.

The words, the verifications, and all the other elegancies of found, as cadences, and turns of words upon the thought, perform exactly the same office both in dramatick and epic poetry. Dryden.

The cadency of one line must be a rule to that of the next; as the sound of the former must slide gently into that which follows. Dryden.

4. The tone or sound.

Hollow rocks retain

The sound of blustering winds, which all night long

Had round the sea, now with horse cadence lull
Paradise Lost.
 Sea-faring men, o'erwatch'd.
 He hath a confused remembrance of words since he left the university; he hath lost half their meaning, and puts them together with no regard, except to their cadence. Swift.
 5. In horsemanship.
 Cadence is an equal measure or proportion, which a horse observes in all his motions, when he is thoroughly managed.
Farrier's Dict.

CAG. n. f. A barrel or wooden vessel, containing four or five gallons.

CAGE. n. f. [cage, Fr. from cavea, Lat.]

1. An inclosure of twigs or wire, in which birds are kept.

See whether a cage can please a bird? or whether a dog grow not fiercer with tying? Sidney.

He taught me how to know a man in love; in which cage of ruffles, I am sure, you are not a prisoner.

Shakspeare. As you like it.

Though slaves, like birds that sing not in a cage,
 They lost their genius, and poetick rage;
 Homers again and Pindars may be found,
 And his great actions with their numbers crown'd. Waller.

And parrots, imitating human tongue,

And singing birds in silver cages hung;

And ev'ry fragrant flower, and odorous green,

Were forced well, with lumps of amber laid between.

Dryden's Fables.

A man recurs to our fancy, by remembering his garment, a beall, bird, or fish, by the cage, or court-yard, or cistern, wherein it was kept.

The reason why so few marriages are happy, is, because young ladies spend their time in making nets, not in making cages. Swift.

2. A place for wild beasts, inclosed with palisades.

3. A prison for petty malefactors.

To CAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose in a cage.

He twain, and pamper'd with high fare,

Sits down, and snorts, cag'd in his basket-chair. Donne.

CAIMAN. n. f. The American name of a crocodile.

To CAJOLE. v. a. [cageoler, Fr.] To flatter; to sooth; to coax; a low word.

Though he, 'tis no mean part of civil

State-prudence, to cajole the devil. Hudibras.

The one affronts him, while the other cajoles and pities him;
 takes up his quarrel, shakes his head at it, clasps his hand upon his breast, and then protests and protests. L'Estrange.

CAJOLER. n. f. [from cajole.] A flatterer; a wheedler.

CAJOLERY. n. f. [cagleria, Fr.] Flattery.

CAISSON. n. f. [French.] A chest of bombs or powder, laid in the enemy's way, to be fired at their approach.

CAITIFF. n. f. [cattiv, Ital. a slave, whence it came to signify a bad man, with some implication of meanness; and as knave in English, and far in Latin; so certainly does slavery destroy virtue.

ἡμεῖς τὴν αἰνίαν ἀπεινολίαν δόλιον ἔμαζον. Homer.

A slave and a foundered are signified by the same words in many languages. A mean villain; a despicable knave.

Vile caitiff, vassal of dread and despair,

Unworthy of the common breathed air;

Why livest thou, dead dog, a longer day,

And dost not unto death thyself prepare. Spenser.

'Tis not impossible

But one, the wicked 't caitiff on the ground,

May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute,

As Angelo. Shakspeare.

The wretched caitiff, all alone,

As he believ'd, began to moan,

And tell his story to himself. Hudibras.

CAKE. n. f. [cakh, Teutonic.]

1. A kind of delicate bread.

You must be seeing christians? do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude rascals? Shakspeare.

My cake is dough, but I'll in among the rest,

Cut of hope of all, but my share of the feast.

Shakspeare. Taming of the Shrew.

The dismal day was come, the priests prepare

Their haven'd cakes, and fillets for my hair. Dryden.

2. Any thing of a form rather flat than high; by which it is sometimes distinguished from a loaf.

There is a cake that groweth upon the side of a dead tree, that hath gotten no name, but it is large and of a chestnut colour, and hard and pithy. Bacon.

Then when the fleecy skies new cloth the wood,

And cakes of rustling ice come rolling down the flood. Bacon.

Dryden's Virgil.

To CAKE. v. n. [from the noun.] To harden, as dough in the oven.

This burning matter, as it sunk very leisurely, had time to cake together, and form the bottom, which covers the mouth of that dreadful vault that lies underneath it. Addison.

This is that very Mah,

That plucks the manes of hoariness in the night,

And cakes the clocks in foul flutth hairs,

Which once entangl'd much misfortune bodys. Shakspeare.

He ris'd the wound,

And wash'd away the strings and clotted blood,

That caid'd within. Addison.

CALABASH Tree.

It hath a flower consisting of one leaf, divided at the brim into several parts; from whose cup rises the pointal, in the hinder part of the flower; which afterwards becomes a fleshy fruit, having an hard shell. They rise to the height of twenty-five or thirty feet in the West-Indies, where they grow naturally in woods, and the savannas. The shells are used by the negroes for cups, as also for making instruments of music, by making a hole in the shell, and putting in small stones, with which they make a sort of rattle. Miller.

CALAMANCO. n. f. [a word derived, probably by some accident, from calamancus, Lat. which, in the middle ages, signified a hat.] A kind of woollen stuff.

He was of a bulk and stature larger than ordinary, had a red coat, slung open to shew a calamanco waistcoat. Tatler.

CALAMINE, or Lapis Calaminarius. n. f. A kind of fofille blue-minous earth, which, being mixed with copper, changes it into brass; it is dug in barren rocky ground, and is often found in lead mines, or has lead mixed with it. It is used as an absorbent and diuretic, in outward medicinal applications, but is seldom given inwardly.

We must not omit those, which, though not of so much beauty, yet are of greater use, viz. loadstones, whetstones of all kinds, limestones, calamine, or lapis calaminarius. Locke.

CALAMINT. n. f. [calaminta, Lat.] The name of a plant.

It hath a long tubulous flower, which opens at the top into two lips; the upper lip is roundish, and divided into two segments: these flowers are produced from the joints of the stalks, at the footstalks of the leaves, in bunches, upon pretty long pedicles, or footstalks. This plant grows wild, and is used in medicine. Miller.

CALAMITOUS. adj. [calamitosus, Lat.]

1. Miserable; involved in distress; oppressed with infelicity; unhappy; wretched; applied to men.

This is a gracious provision God Almighty hath made in favour of the necessitous and calamitous; the state of some, in this life, being so extremely wretched and deplorable, if compared with others. Calamy.

2. Full of misery; distressful; applied to external circumstances.

What calamitous effects the air of this city wrought upon us the last year, you may read in my discourse of the plague.

Harvey on Conjunctions.

Strict necessity

Subdues me, and calamitous constraint!

Left on my head both sin and punishment,

However insupportable, be all

Devolv'd. Milten.

Much rather I shall chuse

To live the poorest in my tribe, than richest,

And be in that calamitous prison left. Milten.

In this sad and calamitous condition, deliverance from an oppressor would have even revived them. South.

CALAMITOUSNESS. n. f. [from calamitous.] Misery; distress.

CALAMITY. n. f. [calamitas, Lat.] Misfortune; cause of misery; distress.

Another ill accident is drought, and the spindling of the corn, which with us is rare, but in hotter countries common, inasmuch as the word calamity was first derived from calama, when the corn could not get out of the stalk. Bacon.

Which infinite calamity shall cause

To human life, and household peace confound. Milten.

From

From adverse flows: in safety let her hear

Foreign calamity, and distant war;

Of which, great heav'n, let her no portion hear. Prior.

CALAMUS, n. f. [Lat.] A sort of reed or sweet flavored wood, mentioned in scripture with the other ingredients of the sacred incense. It is a knotty root, reddish without, and white within, which puts forth long and narrow leaves, and brought from the Indies. The prophets speak of it as a foreign commodity of great value. The sweet reeds have no smell when they are green, but when they are dry only. Their stem differs from other reeds, and their smell is perceived upon entering the nostrils. Cabot.

Take thou also unto thee principal spices of pure myrrh, of sweet cinnamon, and of sweet calamus. Exodus.

CALASH, n. f. [caliche, Fr.] A small carriage of pleasure.

Daniel, a sprightly swain, that us'd to flath

The vigorous floods, that drew his lord's calash. King's Middy of Mounton.

The ancients used calasies, the figures of several of them being to be seen on ancient monuments. They are very simple, light, and drove by the traveller himself. Arbuthnot.

CALCIATED, adj. [calceatus, Lat.] Shod; fitted with shoes.

CALCEDONITE, n. f. [Lat.] A kind of precious stone.

Calcedonite is of the agat kind, and of a misty grey, clouded with blue, or with purple. Woodward.

TO CALCINATE. See TO CALCINE.

CALCINATION, n. f. [from calcinare; calcination, Fr.] Such a management of bodies by fire, as renders them reducible to powder; wherefore it is called chymical pulverization. This is the next degree of the power of fire beyond that of fusion; for when fusion is longer continued, not only the more subtle particles of the body itself fly off, but the particles of fire likewise insinuate themselves in such multitudes, and are so blended through its whole substance, that the fluidity, first caused by the fire, can no longer subsist. From this union arises a third kind of body, which, being very porous and brittle, easily reduced to powder; for, the fire having penetrated every where into the pores of the body, the particles are both hindered from mutual contact, and divided into minute atoms. Quincy.

Direct references of bodies are wont to be thrown away, as from as the distillation or calcination of the body that yielded them is ended. Boyle.

This may be effected, but not without a calcination, or reducing it by art into a subtle powder. Brown's Vulgar Err.

CALCINATORY, n. f. [from calcinare.] A vessel used in calcination.

TO CALCINE, v. a. [calcinare, Fr. from calx, Lat.]

1. To burn in the fire to a calx, or friable substance. See CALCINATION.

In hardening, by baking without melting, the heat hath these degrees; first, it indurates, then maketh fragile, and, lastly, it doth calcine. Bacon.

The folds seem to be earth, bound together with some oil; for if a bone be calcined, so as the least force will crumble it, being immersed in oil, it will grow firm again. Alvatus on Aliments.

2. To burn up.

Fury disputes that union have calcin'd, Denham.

Almost as many minds as men we find.

TO CALCINE, v. n. To become a calx by heat.

This crystal is a pellucid fissile stone, clear as water, and without colour, enduring a red heat without losing its transparency, and, in a very strong heat, calcining without fusion. Newcom's Opticks.

TO CALCULATE, v. a. [calcular, Fr. from calculus, Lat. a little stone or bead, used in operations of numbers.]

1. To compute; to reckon.

2. To compute the situation of the planets at any certain time.

A cunning man did calculate my birth, Shakespeare.

And told me, that by water I should die.

Why all these fies, why all these gliding ghosts,

Why all men fools, and children calculate,

Why all these things change from their ordinance?

Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.

Who were there then in the world, to observe the births of those first men, and calculate their natiivities, as they sprang out of ditches? Bentley.

3. To adjust; to project for any certain end.

The reasonableness of religion clearly appears, as it tends to do so to the happiness of men, and its, upon all accounts, Tillotson.

CALCULATION, n. f. [from calcular.]

1. A practice, or manner of reckoning; the art of numbering. Cypher, that great friend to calculation; or rather, which changeth calculation into easy computation. Hilder.

2. A reckoning; the result of arithmetical operation.

If then their calculation be true: for so they reckon. Hilder.

Being different from calculations of the ancients, their observations confirm not ours. Brown's Vulgar Err.

CALCULATOR, n. f. [from calcular.] A computer; a reckoner.

CALCULATORY, adj. [from calcular.] Belonging to calculation.

CALCULUS, n. f. [calculus, Lat.] Reckoning; compute.

The general calculus, which was made in the last perambulation, exceeded eight millions. Hewel.

CALCULOUS, adj. [from calculus, Lat.] Stony; gritty.

The volatile salt of urine will coagulate spirits of wine; and thus, perhaps, the stones, or calculus concretions in the kidney or bladder, may be produced. Brown's Vulgar Err.

I have found, by opening the kidneys of a calculus person, that the stone is formed earlier than I have suggested. Starp.

CALCULUS, n. f. [Latin.] The stone in the bladder.

CALDROM, n. f. [chaldron, Fr. from calidus, Lat.] A pot; boiler; a kettle.

In the midst of all

There placed was a caldron wide and tall,

Upon a mighty furnace, burning hot. Spenser.

Some strip the skin, some portion out the spoil;

The limbs, yet trembling, in the caldron boil;

Some on the fire the reeking entrails broil. Dryden.

In late eruptions, this great hollow was like a vast caldron, filled with glowing and melted matter, which, as it boiled over in any part, ran down the sides of the mountain.

Addison's Remarks on Italy.

CALCEH. See CALASH.

CALIFACTION, n. f. [from califacio, Lat.]

1. The act of heating any thing.

2. The state of being heated.

CALIFACTION, adj. [from califacio, Lat.] That which makes any thing hot; heating.

CALIFACTION, adj. [from califacio, Lat.] That which heats.

TO CALIFY, v. n. [califico, Latin.] To grow hot; to be heated.

Crystal will calify unto electricity; that is, a power to attract straws, or light bodies, and convert the needle, freely placed. Brown's Vulgar Err.

CALENDAR, n. f. [calendarium, Lat.] A register of the year, in which the months, and fixed times, are marked, as festivals and holidays.

What hath this day decreed? what hath it done,

That in its golden letter should be set

Among the high tides, in the calendar? Shakespeare.

We compute from calendars differing from one another; the compute of the one anticipating that of the other.

Brown's Vulgar Err.

Curs'd be the day when first I did appear;

Let it be blotted from the calendar, Dryden.

Left it pollute the month.

TO CALENDER, v. a. [calender, Fr. stinner.] To dress cloth; to lay the nap of cloth smooth.

CALENDER, n. f. [from the verb.] A hot press; a press in which eluthers smooth their cloth.

CALENDER, n. f. [from calender.] The person who calenders.

CALEND, n. f. [calende, Lat. it has no singular.] The first day of every month among the Romans.

CALENTURE, n. f. [from calis, Lat.] A disemper peculiar to sailors, in hot climates; wherein they imagine the sea to be green fields, and will throw themselves into it, if not restrained. Quincy.

And for that lethargy was there no cure,

But to be cast into a calenture. Denham.

So, by a calenture misled,

The mariner with rapture fies,

On the smooth ocean's azure bed,

Enamell'd fields, and verdant trees;

With eager haste, he longs to rove

In that sunnyside scene, and thinks

It must be some enchanted grove;

And in he leaps, and down he sinks. Swift.

CALF, n. f. calves in the plural. [calf, Saxon; calf, Dutch.]

1. The young of a cow.

The calf hath about four years of growth; and so the fawn, and so the calf. Bacon.

Acosta tells us of a fowl in Peru, called condors, which will, of themselves, kill and eat up a whole calf at a time. Willis's Mathematical Magick.

Ah! Bouzelind, I love thee more by half,

Than does their fawns, or cows the new-fall'n calf. Gay.

2. Calves of the lips, mentioned by Hosea, signify sacrifices of praise and prayers, which the captives of Babylon addressed to God, being no longer in a condition to offer sacrifices in his temple. Calvert.

Take away your words, and turn to the Lord, and say unto him, Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously: so will we render the calves of our lips. Hosea.

3. The thick, plump, fleshy part of the leg. [half, Dutch.]

Into her legs I'd have love's issues fall,

And all her calf into a gouty small.

The calf of that leg blistered. Sackling.

CALIBER, n. f. [calibre, Fr.] The bore; the diameter of the barrel of a gun; the diameter of a bullet.

CALICE, n. f. [calix, Lat.] A cup; a chalice.

There is a natural analogy between the ablation of the body and

and the purification of the soul; between eating the holy bread and drinking the sacred calice, and a participation of the body and blood of Christ. Taylor.

CALICO. n. f. [from Calcuta in India.] An Indian stuff made of cotton; sometimes stained with gay and beautiful colours.

I wear the hoop petticoat, and am all in calicoes, when the finest are in finks. Addison.

CALID. adj. [calidus, Lat.] Hot; burning; fervent.

CALIDITY. n. f. [from calid.] Heat.

Ice will dissolve in any way of heat; for it will dissolve with fire, it will coagulate in water, or warm oil; nor doth it only submit unto an actual heat, but not endure the potential calidity of many waters. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CALIPH. n. f. [khaliifa, Arab. an heir or successor.] A title assumed by the successors of Mahomet among the Saracens, who were vested with absolute power in affairs both religious and civil.

CALIGATION. n. f. [from caligo, Lat. to be dark.] Darknefs; cloudiness.

Instead of a diminution, or imperfect vision, in the mole, we affirm an abolition, or total privation; instead of caligation, or dimness, we conclude a cecity, or blindness. Brown's Vulg. Err.

CALIGINOUS. adj. [caliginosus, Lat.] Obscure; dim; full of darknefs.

CALIGINOUSNESS. n. f. [from caliginosus.] Darknefs; obscurity.

Come, manage me your caliver. Shakespeare.

CALIX. n. f. [Latin.] A cup; a word used in botany; as, the calix of a flower.

TO CALK. v. a. [from calage, Fr. hemp, with which leaks are stopped; or from calk, Sax. the keel, skinner.] To stop the leaks of a ship.

There is a great error committed in the manner of calking his majesty's ships; which being done with rotten oakum, is the cause they are leaky. Relief.

So here some pick out bullets from the fide;

Some drive old oakum through each seam and rift;

Their left-hand does the calking iron guide,

The rattling mallet with the right they lift. Dryden.

CALKER. n. f. [from calk.] The workman that stops the leaks of a ship.

The ancients of Gubal, and the wife men thereof, were in thee thy calkers; all the ships of the sea, with their mariners, were in thee to occupy thy merchandize. Ezekiel.

CALKING. n. f. A term in painting, used where the backside is covered with black lead, or red chalk, and the lines traced through on a waxed plate, wall, or other matter, by passing lightly over each stroke of the design with a point, which leaves an impression of the colour on the plate or wall. Chambers.

TO CALL. v. a. [calo, Lat. kalder, Danish.]

1. To name; to denominate.

And God called the light day, and the darkness he called night. Genesis.

2. To summon, or invite, to or from any place, thing, or person. Be not amazed, call all your senses to you, defend my reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever. Shakspeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Why came not the slave back to me, when I called him? Shakspeare. King Lear.

Are you call'd forth from out a world of men,

To lay the innocent?

Lodronius, that famous captain, was called up, and told by his servants, that the general was fled. Kneller.

Or call up him, that left half told

The story of Cambuscan bold.

Drunkennes call'd off the watchmen from their towers; and then evils proceed from a loose heart, and an untied tongue. Milton.

The soul makes use of her memory, to call to mind what she is to treat of. Taylor.

Such fine employments our whole days divide,

The salutations of the morning tide

Call up the sun; those enclod, to the hall

We wait the patron, hear the lawyers brawl. Dryden.

Then, by counsel, abstain from further toils,

Call off the dogs, and gather up the spoils. Addison.

By the pleasures of the imagination or fancy, I mean such as arise from visible objects, when we call up their ideas into our minds by paintings, statues, or descriptions. Addison.

Why dost thou call my sorrows up afresh!

My father's name brings tears into my eyes. Addison.

I am call'd off from publick dissertations, by a domestick affair of great importance. Tatler.

Æschylus has a tragedy, entitled Perseus, in which the shade of Darius is called up. Brome.

The passions call away the thoughts, with incessant importunity, toward the object that excited them. Harris.

3. To convoke; to summon together.

Now call we our high court of parliament. Shakspeare.

The king being informed of much that had passed that night, sent to the lord mayor to call a common council immediately. Clarendon.

4. To summon judicially.

The king had sent for the earl to return home, where he should be called to account for all his miscarriages. Clarendon.

Once a day, especially in the early years of life and study, call yourselves to an account, what new ideas, what new proposition or truth, you have gained. Harris.

5. To summon by command.

In that day did the Lord God of hosts call to weeping, and to mourning, and to baldness, and to girding with sackcloth. Isaiah xxii. 12.

6. In the theological sense, to inspire with ardours of piety; or to summon into the church.

Paul a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, separated unto the gospel of God. Romans.

7. To invoke; to appeal to.

I call God for a record upon my soul, that, to spare you, I came not as yet unto Corinth. 2 Corinthians.

When that lord perplexed their counsels and designs, with inconvenient objections in law, the authority of the lord Manchester, who had trod the same paths, was still called upon. Clarendon.

8. To proclaim; to publish.

Nor ballad-finger, plac'd above the crowd,
Sings with a note so thrilling, sweet, and loud,
Nor parish-clerk, who calls the psalm to clear. Gay.

9. To make a short visit.

And, as you go, call on my brother Quintus,
And pray him, with the tribunes, to come to me. Ben. Jonson's Calisto.

He ordered her to call at his house once a week, which he did for some time after, when he heard no more of her. Tempe.

That I might begin as near the fountain-head as possible, I fill of all calles in at St. James's. Addison.

We called in at Morge, where there is an artificial port. Addison in Italy.

10. To excite; to put in action; to bring into view.

He swells with angry pride,
And calls forth all his spots on every side. Caesar.

Sie Dionysius Homer's thoughts refine,
And call new beauties forth from ev'ry line. Pope.

11. To fligmatize with some opprobrious denomination.

Deal with unqualities men for all company, except friends; whom I can call names, if they do not speak loud enough. Swift to Pope.

12. To call back. To revoke; to retract.

He also is wife, and will bring evil, and will not call back his words; but will arise against the house of the evil doers, and against the help of them that work iniquity. Isaiah.

13. To call for. To demand; to require; to claim.

Madam, his majesty doth call for you,
And for your grace, and you, my noble lord. Shakspeare.

You see, how men of merit are fought after; the wisestest may sleep, when the man of action is called for. Shakspeare.

Among them he a spirit of phrensy lent,
Who hurt their minds,

And urg'd you on, with mad desire,
To call in hails for their destroyers. Milton.

For master, or for servant, here to call,
Was all alike, where only two were all.

He commits every tin that his appetite calls for, or perhaps his constitution or fortune can bear. Dryden.

14. To call in. To resume money at interest.

Horace describes an old usurer, as so charmed with the pleasures of a country life, that, in order to make a purchase, he called in all his money; but what was the event of it? when, in a very few days after, he put it out again. Addison.

15. To call in. To resume any thing that is in other hands.

If clipped money be called in all at once, and stopped from passing by weight, I fear it will stop trade, and put our affairs all at a stand. Locke.

Neither is any thing more cruel and oppressive in the French government, than their practice of calling in their money, when they have sunk it very low, and then coining it anew, at a higher value. Swift.

16. To call in. To summon together; to invite.

The heat is past, follow me no farther now;
Call in the pious, good cousin, Westmoreland. Shakspeare.

He fears my subjects loyalty,
And now must call in strangers. Denham.

17. To call on. To solicit for a favour, or a debt.

I would be loth to pay him before his day; what need I be so forward with him, that calls not on me? Shakspeare.

18. To call on. To repeat solemnly.

Thrice call upon my name, thrice beat your breast,
And hail me thrice to everlasting rest. Dryden.

The Athenians, when they lost any men at sea, went to the bottom. Boetes.

shores, and, calling thrice on their names, raised a cenotaph, or empty monument, to their memories. Broom.

10. To call over. To read aloud a list or muster-roll.

20. To call out. To challenge; to summon to fight.

When their sov'reign's quarrel calls 'em out,
His foes to mortal combat they defy. Dryden's Virgil.

21. To call upon. To implore; to pray to.
Call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me. Psalms i. 15.

CALL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A vocal address.

But would you fong, and rival Orpheus' strain,
The wond'ring forests soon should dance again;
The moving mountains hear the pow'ful call,
And headlong streams hang list'ning in their fall. Pope.

2. Requisition.

It may be feared, whether our nobility would contentedly suffer themselves to be always at the call, and to stand to the sentence of a number of mean persons. Hester, Preface.

But death comes not at call; justice divine

Mends not her slowest pace, for pray'rs or cries. Par. Lost.

3. Divine vocation; summons to true religion.

Yet he at length, time to himself best known,
Rememb'ring Abraham, by some wond'rous call,
May bring them back repentant and sincere. Par. Regained.

St. Paul himself believed he did well, and that he had a call to it, when he persecuted the christians, whom he confidently thought in the wrong: but yet it was he, and not they, who were mistaken. Lact.

4. A summons from heaven; an impulse.

How justly then will impious mortals fall,
Whose pride would soar to heav'n without a call? Roscomm.
Those who to empire by dark paths aspire,
Still plead a call to what they most desire. Dryden.

5. Authority; command.

Oh! Sir, I wish he were within my call, or your's. Domb.

6. A demand; a claim.

Dependence is a perpetual call upon humanity, and a greater incitement to tenderness and pity, than any other motive whatsoever. Adams.

7. An instrument to call birds.

For those birds or beasts were made from such pipes or calls, as may express the several tones of those creatures, which are perceived. Watkins.

8. Calling; vocation; employment.

Now, through the land, his cure of souls he stretch'd,
And, like a primitive apostle, preach'd;
Still cheerful, ever constant to his call:

By many follow'd, lov'd by most, admir'd by all. Dryden.

9. A nomination.

Upon the sixteenth was held the sergeants feast at Ely place, there being nine sergeants of that call. Bacon.

CALLER. n. f. A trull.

He call'd her whore; a beggar, in his drink,
Could not have laid such terms upon his caller. Shakspeare.

CALLING. n. f. [from call.]

1. Vocation; profession; trade.

If God has interposed such a pleasure with our ordinary calling, how much superior must that be, which arises from the survey of a pious life? Surely, as much as christianity is nobler than a trade. South.

We find ourselves oblig'd to go on in honest industry in our calling. Rogers.

I cannot forbear warning you against endeavouring at wit in your sermons; because many of your calling have made themselves ridiculous by attempting it. Swift.

I let no calling for this idle trade,

No duty broke, no father disobey'd. Pope.

2. Proper station, or employment.

The Gauls found the Roman senators ready to die with honour in their callings. Swift.

3. Class of persons united by the same employment or profession.

It may be a caution to all christian churches and magistrates, not to impute celibacy on whole callings, and great multitudes of men or women, who cannot be supposable to have the gift of continence. Hammoud.

4. Divine vocation; invitation or impulse to the true religion.

St. Peter was ignorant of the calling of the Gentiles. Hatwell on Providence.

CALLIPERS. n. f. [of this word I know not the etymology, nor does any thing more probable occur, than that, perhaps, the word is corrupted from clippers, instruments with which any thing is clipped, inclosed or embraced.] Compasses with bowed limbs.

Callipers measure the distance of any round, cylindrick, conical body, either in their extremity, or any part less than the extreme; so that, when work men use them, they open the two points to their described width, and turn so much stuff off the intended place, till the two points of the callipers fit just over their work. Moxon.

CALLOSTITY. n. f. [callositas, Fr.] A kind of swelling without pain, like that of the skin, by hard labour, and therefore, when wounds, or the edges of ulcers, grow so, they are said to be callous.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet of his patient, as he finds the fibres loosen too much, are too flaccid, and produce fungules, or as they harden and produce callosities; in the first case, wine and spirituous liquours are useful, in the last hurtful. Arbutnot on Diet.

CALLOUS. adj. [callus, Lat.]

1. Indurated; hardened; having the pores shut up.
In progress of time, the ulcers became sinuous and callous, with induration of the glands. Wifeman.

2. Hardened; inflexible.

Licentiousness has so long passed for sharpness of wit, and greatness of mind, that the confidence is grown callous. L'Estr.

The wretch is drench'd too deep,
His soul is stupid, and his heart asleep;
Fatten'd in vice, so callous and so gross;
He sins, and fees not, senseless of his loss. Dryden.

CALLOUSNESS. n. f. [from callus.]

1. Hardness; induration of the fibres.
The often we use the organs of touching, the more of these scales are formed, and the skin becomes the thicker, and is a callosities grows upon it. Clyne.

2. Inflexibility.

If they let go their hope of everlasting life with willingness, and entertain final perdition with exultation, ought they not to be esteemed destitute of common sense, and abandoned to a callosities and numbness of soul? Bentley.

CALLOW. adj. Unfedged; naked; without feathers.

Burbling with kindly rapture, forth disclos'd
Their callow young. Milton.

Then as an eagle, who, with pious care,
Was beating widely on the wing for prey,
To her now silent airy does repair,
And finds her callow infants forc'd away. Dryden.

And teach the callow child her parent's song. Prior.

CALLUS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. An induration of the fibres.

2. The hard substance by which broken bones are united.

CALM. adj. [calme, Fr. calm, Dutch.]

1. Quiet; serene; not stormy; not tempestuous; applied to the elements.

Calm was the day, and, through the trembling air,
Sweet breathing Zephyrus did softly play
A gentle spirit, that lightly did alay
Hot Titan's beams, which then did glister fair. Spenser.

2. Undisturb'd; untroubled; applied to the passions.

It is no ways congruous, that God should be frightening men into truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence, and gentle methods of persuasion. Atterbury.

The queen her speech with calm attention hears,
Her eyes restrain the flood-streaming tears. Pope.

CALM. n. f.

1. Serenity; stillness; freedom from violent motion.

It seemeth most agreeable to reason, that the waters rather flood in a calm, than that they moved with any raging or overbearing violence. Railings.

Every pilot
Can steer the ship in calm; but he performs
The skilful part, can manage it in storms.
Nor God alone in the still calm we find,
He mounts the storm, and walks upon the wind. Pope.

2. Freedom from disturbance; quiet; repose; applied to the passions.

Great and strange calms usually portend the most violent storms: and therefore, since storms and calms do always follow one another, certainly, of the two, it is much more eligible to have the storm first, and the calm afterwards: since a calm before a storm is commonly a peace of a man's own making; but a calm after a storm, a peace of God's. South.

TO CALM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To still; to quiet.

Neptune we find busy in the beginning of the Æneis, to calm the tempest raised by Æolus. Dryden.

2. To pacify; to appease.

Jesus, whose bare word checked the sea, as much exerts himself in silencing the tempests, and calming the intestine storms within our breasts. Deacy of Percy.

Those passions, which seem somewhat calmed, may be entirely laid asleep, and never more awakened. Atterbury.

He will'd to stay,

The sacred rites and lecatombs to pay,
And calm Minerva's wrath. Pope.

CALMER. n. f. [from calm.] The person or thing which has the power of giving quiet.

Angling was, after tedious study, a rest to his mind, a cheerer of his spirits, a diverter of sadness, a calmer of unquiet thoughts, a moderator of passions, a procurer of contentedness. Wolsten.

CALMLY. adv. [from calm.]

1. Without storms, or violence; serenity.

In nature, things move violently to their place, and calmly in their place; so virtue in ambition is violent, in authority settled and calm. Bacon.

His curled brows
Frown on the gentle stream, which calmly flows. Denham.
2. Without passions; quietly.

The nymph did like the scene appear,
Serenely pleasant, calmly fair;
Soft fell her words, as flew the air. Prior.

CALMNESS. n. f. [from calm.] Denham.

1. Tranquillity; serenity.
While the steep horrid roughness of the wood
Strives with the gentle calmness of the flood. Denham.

2. Mildness; freedom from passion,
I've been i' th' market-place, and, Sir, 'tis fit
You have strong party, or defend yourself
By calmness, or by absence: all's in anger. Shakspeare.

I beg the grace,
You would lay by those terrors of your face;
Till calmness, to your eyes you first restore,
I am afraid, and I can beg no more. Dryden.

CALMY. adj. [from calm.] Calmy ; peaceful.

And now they high approached to the flood,
Where as those mermaids dwelt: it was a still
And calmy bay, on th' one side sheltered. Fairy Queen.

CALOMEL. n. f. [calomele, a chymical word.] Mercury fix times sublimed.

He repeated lenient purgatives with calomele, once in three or four days. Wifeman.

CALORIFICK. adj. [calorificus, Lat.] That which has the quality of producing heat; heating.

Calorific principle is either excited within the heated body, or transferred to it, through any medium, from some other. Silver will grow hotter than the liquor it contains.

Grex's Candelgia Sacra, b. i. c. 2. §. 9.

CALOTTE. n. f. [French.]

1. A cap or coil, worn as an ecclesiastical ornament in France.
2. [In architecture.] A round cavity or depression, in form of a cap or cup, lathed and plastered, used to diminish the rise or elevation of a moderate chapel, cabinet, alcove, &c. Harri.

CALOYERS. n. f. [καλοῦ] Monks of the Greek church.

CALOTROPS. n. f. [calotropis, Saxon.]

1. An instrument made with three spikes, so that which way soever it falls to the ground, one of them points upright, to wound hoofs &c.

The ground about was thick sown with calotrops, which very much incommoded the fleecy flocks. Dr. Addison's Account of Tangiers.

2. A plant.

It is very common in the South of France, Spain, and Italy, where it grows among corn, and on most of the arable land, and is very troublesome to the feet of cattle, for the fruit being armed with strong prickles, run into the feet of the cattle, which walk over the land. This is certainly the plant which is mentioned in Virgil's Georgick, under the name of tribulus. Miller.

TO CALVE. v. n. [from calv.]

1. To bring a calf; spoken of a cow.
When she has calv'd, then let the dam aside,
And for the tender progeny provide. Dryden.

2. It is used metaphorically for any act of bringing forth; and sometimes of men, by way of reproach.

I would they were barbarians, as they are,
Though in Rome litter'd; not Romans; as they are not;
Though calv'd in the porch o' th' Capitol. Shakspeare.

The grassy clods now calv'd, now half appear'd
The tawny lion, pawing to get free
His hinder parts. Milton.

CALVES-SNOT. See SNAPDRAGON.

CALVILLE. n. f. [French.] A fort of apple. See APPLE.

TO CALUMNIATE. v. n. [calumniar, Lat.] To accuse falsely; to charge without just ground.

Beauty, wit, high birth, desert in service,
Love, friendship, charity, are subject all
To envious and calumniating time. Shakspeare.

He mixes truth with falsehood, and has not forgotten the old rule of calumniating strongly, that something may remain. Dryden's Fables.

DO CALUMNIATE! thou ungrateful Vanoc! —

Perfidious prince! — Is it a calumny
To say, that Gwendolen betroth'd to Yver,
Was by her father first offer'd to Valens? A. Philippi.

TO CALUMNIATE. v. a. To slander.

One trade or art, even those that should be the most liberal, shall make it their business to calumniate another. Seyat.

CALUMNIA'TION. n. f. [from calumniare.] That which we call calumniation, is a malicious and false representation of an enemy's words or actions, in an offensive purpose. Asch.

CALUMNIATOR. n. f. [from calumniare.] A forger of accusation; a slanderer.

He that would live clear of the envy and hatred of potent calumniators, must lay his finger upon his mouth, and keep his hand out of the ink-pot. L'Esfrange.

At the same time that Virgil was celebrated by Gallus, we know that Bavius and Mævius were his declared foes and calumniators. Asch.

CALUMNIOUS. adj. [from calumny.] Slandering; falsely reproachful.

Virtue itself 'scapes not calumnious strokes. Shakspeare.
With calumnious art
Of counterfeited truth, thus hold their ears. Milton.

CALUMNY. n. f. [calumnia, Lat.] Slander; false charge; groundless accusation.

Be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow,
Thou shalt not escape calumny. Shakspeare.

It is a very hard calumny upon our soil or climate, to affirm, that so excellent a fruit will not grow here. Temple.

CALX. n. f. [Latin.] Any thing that is rendered reducible to powder by burning.

Gold, that is more dense than lead, resists peremptorily all the dividing power of fire; and will not at all be reduced into a calx, or lime, by such operation as reduces lead into it. Digby on Metals.

CAMATEU. n. f. [from camachia, which name is given by the orientals to the onyx, when, in preparing it, they had another colour.]

1. A stone with various figures and representations of landscapes, formed by nature.

2. [In painting.] A term used where there is only one colour, and where the lights and shadows are of gold, wrought on a golden or azure ground. This kind of work is chiefly used to represent bas-reliefs. Chemists.

CAMBER. n. f. [See CAMBERING.] A term among workmen.

Camber, a piece of timber cut arching, so as a weight considerable being set upon it, it may, in length of time, be induced to a straight. Mason.

CAMBERING. n. f. A word mentioned by Stinner, as peculiar to shipbuilders, who say, that a place is cambering, when they mean arched. [from cam'rr, French.]

CAMBRICK. n. f. [from Cambray, a city in Flanders, where it was principally made.] A kind of fine linen, used for ruffles, women's sleeves and caps.

He hath ribbons of all the colours of the rainbow; inks, caddises, cambricks, and lawns. Shakspeare.

Rebecca had, by the use of a looking-glass, and by the further use of certain attire, made of cambrick, upon her head, attained to an evil art. Teller.

Confederate in the cheat, they draw the throng,
And cambrick handkerchiefs reward the song. Gay.

CAME. The proterite of to come.

Till all the pack came up, and ev'ry hound
Tore the sad huntsman, growling on the ground. Asch.

CAMEL. n. f. [camelus, Lat.] An animal very common in Arabia, Judea, and the neighbouring countries. One sort is large, and full of flesh, and fit to carry burdens of a thousand pounds weight, having one bunch upon its back. Another have two bunches upon their backs, like a natural saddle, and are fit either for burdens, or men to ride on. A third kind is leaner, and of a smaller size, called dromedaries, because of their swiftness; which are generally used for riding by men of quality. See DROMEDARY.

Camels have large solid feet, but not hard; in the spring, their hair falls entirely off, in less than three days time, when the flies are extremely uneasy to them. Camels, it is said, will continue ten or twelve days without eating or drinking, and keep water a long time in their stomach, for their refreshment.

It is reported, that nature has furnished them, for this purpose, with a very large ventricle, with many bags closed within the coats of it, round about it, for reserving the water. But the Jesuits in China, where they dissected several camels, found no such bags. When a camel is upon a journey, his matter follows him, going and whistling; and the louder he sings, the better the camel goes. The flesh of camels is served up at the best tables, among the Arabians, Persians, and other eastern nations, but the use of it was forbid the Hebrews, they being ranked by Moses among the unclean creatures, Levit. xiv. 7. Cantab.

Patient of thirst and toil,
Son of the desert! even the camels,
Shot through his wither'd heart, the fiery blast. Thompson.

CAMELOPARD. n. f. [from camelus and pardus, Lat.] An Assyrian animal, taller than an elephant, but not so thick. He is so named, because he has a neck and head like a camel; he is spotted like a pard, but his spots are white upon a red ground. Freyer.

The Camels call him giav'as.

CAMELOT. n. f. [from camel.] A kind of stuff originally made of silk and wool and silk.

CAMELOT. n. f. [from camel.] A kind of stuff originally made of silk and wool and silk.

This habit was not of camel skin, nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camels, goat, or the like; in as much as these stuffs are supposed to be made of the hair of that animal. Brown.

Meantime the pastor hears their hoary beards,
And eases, of their hair, the loaden herds;
Their camlets warm in tents the soldier hold,
And shield the shiv'ring mariner from cold.

Dryden.

CAMERA Obscura. [Latin.] An optical machine used in a darkened chamber, so that the light coming only through a double convex glass, objects exposed to daylight, and opposite to the glass, are represented inverted upon any white matter placed in the focus of the glass.

Martin.

CAMERADE n. f. [from camera, a chamber, Lat.] One that lodges in the same chamber; a bosom companion. By corruption we now use camade.

Camader with him, and confederates in his worthy design,

Rymer's Tragedies of Ipsi Age.

CAMERATED adj. [from cameratus, Lat.] Arched; roofed floe-wile.

CAMERA'TION adj. [from cameratus, Lat.] A vaulting or arching.

CAMIA DO n. f. [from camia, a thirt, Ital. camisum, low Lat.] An attack made by soldiers in the dark; on which occasion they put their thirts outward, to be seen by each other.

They had appointed the same night, whose darkness would have increased the fear, to have given a camisado upon the English.

His word.

CAMISATED adj. [from camisado, a thirt.] Dressed with the thirt outward.

CAMLET. See CAMLEOT.

He had on him a gown with wide sleeves, of a kind of water camlet, of an excellent azure colour.

Bacon.

CAMMOCK n. f. [from cammoec, saxon.] An herb; the same with pernithia, or rythbarrow.

Its flower is papilionaceous, and succeeded by a swelling pod, sometimes long, and sometimes short, which is bivalve, and filled with kidney-shaped seeds.

There are many species of this plant, of which four sorts grow wild in England; and that called the prick y rylbarrow, with purple flowers, is used in medicine. The roots of this plant spread far under ground, and are so tough, that, in ploughing, it often forces the oxen.

Miller.

CAMOUS adj. [from camus, Fr.] Flat; level; depressed. It is only used of the nose.

Many Spaniards, of the race of Barbary Moors, though after frequent commixture, have not worn out the camous nose unto this day.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CAMP n. f. [from camp, Fr. camp, Sax. from campus, Lat.] The order of tents, placed by armies when they keep the field. We use the phrase to pitch a camp, to encamp.

From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night,

The hum of either army stilly sounds.

Shaksp.

Next, to secure our camp, and naval powers,

Raise an embattled wall, with lofty towers.

Pope.

CAMP v. a. [from the noun.] To encamp; to lodge in tents, for hostile purposes.

Had our great palace the capacity

To camp this host, we would ill put together.

Shaksp.

CAMP-FIGHT n. f. An old word for combat.

For their trial by camp-fight, the accuser was, with the peril of his own body, to prove the accused guilty; and, by offering him his glove or gantlet, to challenge him to this trial.

Hastivill.

CAMPANIA n. f. [from campagna, French; campania, Ital.]

1. A large, open, level tract of ground, without hills.

The contrary of all this happens in countries thinly inhabited, and especially in vast campania, where there are few cities, besides what grow by the residence of kings.

Temple.

Those graceful groves, that shade the plain,

Where Tiber rolls majestic to the main,

And fountains, as he runs, the fair campagna.

Garth.

2. The time for which any army keeps the field, without entering into quarters.

This might have hastened his march, which would have made a fair conclusion of the campagna.

Cia endu.

An illud rising out of one campagna.

Addison.

CAMPANIFORM adj. [of campana, a bell, and forma, Lat.] A term used of flowers, which are in the shape of a bell.

Harris.

CAMPANULATE adj. The same with campaniform.

CAMPYSTRAL adj. [from campystris, Lat.] Growing in fields.

The mountain beech is the whitest; but the campystra, or white beech, is of a blacker colour, and more durable.

Alcristen's Husbandry.

CAMPURE TREE n. f. [from camphora, Lat.]

It hath leaves like those of the pear tree, but full of ribs, which grow alternately on the branches; the flowers consist of one leaf, divided into five or six segments; the fruit is shaped like a nut, the shell tender, and the kernel bish. There are two sorts of this tree; one is a native of the isle of Borneo, from which the best camphire is taken, which is supposed to be a natural exudation from the tree, produced in such places where the bark of the tree has been wounded or cut. The other sort is a native of Japan, which Dr. Kempter describes to be a kind of bay, bearing black or purple berries, and from whence the inhabitants prepare their camphire, by making a simple decoction of the root and wood of this tree, cut into small pieces; but this sort of camphire is, in value, eighty or an hundred times less than the true Bornean camphire.

CAMPHORATE adj. [from camphora, Lat.] Impregnated with camphire.

By shaking the saline and camphorate liquours together, we easily conjoined them into one high coloured liquor.

Boyle.

CAMPION n. f. [from champion, Lat.] A plant

The leaves are whole, and grow opposite by pairs upon the stalks; the cup of the flower is whole, and either tubulose or swelling; the flower consists of five leaves, which expand in form of a clove gilliflower, and are generally heart-shaped; the ovary, which rises in the centre of the calyx, becomes a conical fruit, which is wrapped up in the flower cup, and has commonly one cell, filled with seeds, which are roundish, angular, and kidney-shaped.

CAMPUS n. f. [probably from campus, Lat.] A thin dress, mentioned by Spenser.

And wasyclad, for heat of scorching air,
All in silken campus, lilly white,
Purged upon with many a folded plight.

Fairy Queen.

CAN n. f. [from canne, Sax.] A cup; generally a cup made of metal, or some other matter than earth.

I hate it as an unfill'd can.

One tree, the coco, affordeth fluff for housing, cloathing, shipping, meat, drink, and can.

His empty can, with ears half worn away,

Was hung on high, to boast the triumph of the day.

Dryden.

CAN v. n. [from canen, Dutch.] It is sometimes, though rarely, used alone, but is in constant use as an expression of the potential mood; as, I can do, thou canst do, I could do, thou couldst do. It has no other terminations.

1. To be able; to have power.

In place there is licence to do good and evil, whereof the latter is a curse; for, in evil, the best condition is not to will; the second not to can.

Bacon.

2. Can, O, there's the wonder!

Mecenas and Agrippa, who can most

With Cæsar, and his foes. His wife Octavia,

Driv'n from his house, solicits her revenge,

And Dolabella, who was once his friend.

Dryden's All for Love.

He can away with no company, whose discourse goes beyond what claret and dulcetness inspires.

2. It expresses the potential mood; as, I can do.

If the can make me blest? She only can do it.

Empire, and wealth, and all the things beside,

Are but the train and trappings of her love.

3. It is distinguished from may, as power from permission; I can do it; it is in my power: I may do it; it is allowed me; but, in poetry, they are confounded.

4. Can is used of the person with the verb active, where may is used; of the thing, with the verb passive; as, I can do it, it may be done.

CANAPILLE n. f. [French.] The lowest people; the dregs; the lees; the offscouring of the people: a French term of reproach.

CANA'L n. f. [from canali, Lat.]

1. A basin of water in a garden.

The walks and long canals reply.

2. Any tract or course of water made by art; as the canals in Holland.

3. [In anatomy.] A conduit or passage through which any of the juices of the body flow.

CANAL-COAL n. f. A fine kind of coal, dug up in England.

Even our canal-coal nearly equals the foreign jet.

Woodward on Fossils.

CANALICULATED adj. [from canaliculatus, Lat.] Channelled; made like a pipe or gutter.

Diet.

CANARY n. f. [from the Canary islands.] Wine brought from the Canaries; canary.

I will to my honest knight Falstaff, and drink canary with him.—I think I shall drink in pipe wine first with him; I'll make him dance.

Shaksp.

CANARY v. a. A cant word, which seems to signify to frolic.

Matter, will you win your love with a French brawl?—How mean'st thou bawling in French?—No, my comely matter; but to jigg off a tune at the tongue's end, canary to it with your feet, humour it with turning up your eyes.

Shaksp. Love's Labour's Lost.

CANARY BIRD. An excellent singing bird, of a green colour, formerly bred in the Canaries, and nowhere else, but now bred in several parts of Europe, particularly Germany.

Of singing birds, they have linnets, goldfinches, ruddocks, canary birds, blackbirds, thrushes, and divers other.

Cæsar's Survey of Cornwall.

CANCEL v. a. [from cancelli, Fr. from cancelli, Lat., to mark with cross lines.]

1. To cross a writing.

2. To efface; to obliterate in general.

Now welcome night, thou night so long expected,

That long day's labour dots at last defray,

And

And all my cares which cruel love collected,
Has summ'd in one, and cancelled for aye.
Know then, there forget all former griefs,
Cancel all grudge; repeat thee home again.

Shakep. Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Thou whom avenging pow'r's obey,
Cancel my debts, too great to pay,
Before the sad accounting day.
I pass the bills, my lords,
For cancelling your debts.

Spenser.

Reforman.

Soutbern.

CANCELLED. particip. adj. [from cancel.] Crossed with lines crossing each other.
The tail of the caistor is almost bald, though the beast is very hairy; and cancelled, with some resemblance to the scales of fishes.

CANCELLATION. n. f. [from cancel.] According to Bartolus, is an expunging or wiping out of the contents of an instrument, by two lines drawn in the manner of a cross.

CANCER. n. f. [cancer, Lat.]

1. A crabfish.

2. The sign of the summer solstice.

When now no more th' alternate twins are fir'd,

And Cancer reddens with the solar blaze,

Short is the doubtful empire of the night.

3. A virulent swelling, or force, not to be cured.

Any of these three may degenerate into a schirrus, and that schirrus into a cancer.

As when a cancer on the body feeds,

And gradual death from limb to limb proceeds;

So does the chiliness to each vital part,

Spread by degrees, and creeps into the heart.

TO CANCERATE. v. n. [from cancer.] To grow cancerous; to become a cancer.

But striking his fist upon the point of a nail in the wall, his hand cancerated, he fell into a fever, and soon after died on't.

CANCERATION. n. f. [from cancerate.] A growing cancerous.

CANCEROUS. n. f. [from cancer.] Having the violence and qualities of a cancer.

How they are to be treated when they are stumous, schirrhous, or cancerous, you may see in their proper places.

CANCEROUSNESS. n. f. [from cancerous.] The state of being cancerous.

CANCERISE. adj. [from cancer.] Having the qualities of a crab.

CANDENT. adj. [from candens, Lat.] Hot; in the highest degree of heat, next to fuligin.

If a wire be heated only at one end, according to that end is cooled upward or downward, it respectively requires a verticity, as we have declared in wires totally candent.

CANDICANT. adj. [from candicans, Lat.] Growing white; whitish.

CANDID. adj. [from candidus, Lat.]

1. White. This sense is very rare.

The box receives a black; but, pour'd from thence,

The flames came cand forth, the hue of innocence.

2. Without malice; without deceit; fair; open; ingenuous.

The import of the discourse will, for the most part, if there be no designed fallacy, sufficiently lead candid and intelligent readers into the true meaning of it.

A candid judge will read each piece of wit,

With the same spirit that its author writ.

CANDIDATE. n. f. [from candidatus, Lat.] A competitor; one that solicits, or proposes himself for something of advancement.

So many candidates there stand for wit,

A place at court is scarce so hard to get.

One would be surpris'd to see so many candidates for glory.

3. It has generally for before the thing fought.

What could thoust high thy rash ambition raise?

Art thou, fond youth, a candidate for praise?

Sometimes of.

Thy first fruits of poetry were giv'n,

To make thyself a welcome inmate there,

While yet a young probationer,

And candidate of heav'n.

CANDIDLY. adv. [from candid.] Fairly; without trick; without malice; ingenuously.

We have often desired, they would deal candidly with us;

for if the matter stuck only there, we would propose, that every man should swear, that he is a member of the church of Ireland.

CANDIDNESS. n. f. [from candid.] Ingenuity; openness of temper; purity of mind.

It frequently sees the guilt of a sinful action; and, on the other side, observes the candidness of a man's very principles, and the sincerity of his intentions.

TO CANDIFY. v. a. [from candifico, Lat.] To make white; to whiten.

CANDLE. n. f. [from candela, Lat.]

1. A light made of wax or tallow, surrounding a wick of flax or cotton.

Here burns my candle out, ay, here it dies,
Which, while it lasted, gave King Henry light.
We see that wax candles last longer than tallow candles, because wax is more firm and hard.

Take a child, and, setting a candle before him, he shall find his pupil to contract very much, to exclude the light, with the brightness whereof it would otherwise be dazzled.

2. Light, or luminary.

By these blest candles of the night,

Had you been there, I think you would have begg'd

The ring of me, to give the worthy doctor.

CANDLEBERRY TREE. See SWEET-WILLOW; of which it is a species.

CANDLEHOLDER. n. f. [from candle and hold.]

1. He that holds the candle.

2. He that remotely assists.

Let wantons, light of heart,

Tickle the senseless ruffles with their heels;

For I am proverb'd with a grandfire phrase,

To be a candleholder, and look on.

CANDLELIGHT. n. f. [from candle and light.] The light of a candle.

In darkness, candlelight may serve to guide men's steps, which, to use in the day, were madnes,

Before the day was done, her work the sped,

And never went by candlelight to bed.

The bowing old

Steals from her private cell by night,

And flies about the candlelight.

Such as are adapted to meals, will indifferently serve for dinners or suppers, only distinguishing between daylight and candlelight.

2. The necessary candles for use.

I shall find him coals and candlelight.

CANDLEMAS. n. f. [from candle and mas.] The feast of the purification of the blessed Virgin, which was formerly celebrated with many lights in churches.

The harvest dinners are held by every wealthy man, or, as we term it, by every good liver, between Michaelmas and Candlemas.

There is a general tradition in most parts of Europe, that inferreth the coldness of the succeeding winter, upon shining of the sun upon Candlemas day.

Come Candlemas nine years ago the day's,

And now lies bury'd by the yew-tree side.

CANDLESTICK. n. f. [from candle and stick.] The instrument that holds candles.

The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,

With torch flaves in their hands; and their poor jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the hide and hips.

These countries were once christian, and members of the church; and where the golden candlesticks did stand.

I know a friend, who has converted the essays of a man of quality, into a kind of fringe for his candlesticks.

CANDLESTUFF. n. f. [from candle and stuff.] Kitchen stuff; grease; tallow.

But then you will say, that their vapour can last but a short time; to that it may be answered, that, by the help of oil, and wax, and other candlestuff, the flame may continue, and the wick not burn.

CANDLEWASTER. n. f. [from candle and waste.] That which consumes candles; a spendthrift.

Patch grief with proverbs, make misfortune drunk

With candlewaster.

CANDOCK. n. f. A weed that grows in rivers.

Let them dry six or twelve months, both to kill the water-weeds, as water-lilies, candocks, reate, and bulrushes, and also, that as these die for want of water, so grays may grow on the pond's bottom.

CANDOUR. n. f. [from candor, Lat.] Sweetness of temper; purity of mind; openness; ingenuity; kindness.

He should have so much of a natural candour and sweetness, mixed with all the improvement of learning, as might convey knowledge with a sort of gentle insinuation.

TO CANDY. v. a. [probably from candore, a word used in later times, for to whiten.]

1. To conserve with sugar, in such a manner as that the sugar lies in flakes, or breaks into tangles.

Should the poor be flatter'd?

No, let the candy'd tongue lick absurd pomp,

And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee,

Where thrift may follow fawning.

They have in Turkey confections like to candied conserves, made of sugar and lemons, or sugar and citrons, or sugar and violets, and some other flowers, and some mixture of amber.

With candy'd plantanes, and the juicy pine,

On choicest melons and sweet grapes they dine.

2. To form into congelations.

CAN

CAN

Will the cold brook,
Candied with ice, cawdle thy morning toast,
To cure thy o'er-night's surfeit?

Shakspeare.

3. To incrust with congelations.

Since when those frosts that winter brings,
Which cawdy every green,
Renew us like the teeming springs,
And we thus fresh are seen.

Dryden.

TO CAN'DY. v. n. To grow congealed.

CAN'DY Lin's foot. [canance, Lat.] A plant.

The cup of the flower is squamose; the florets round the margin are much longer than those in the middle of the flower; the seeds are wrapt up in a leafy or downy substance within the cup, or outer covering. This plant begins to flower in May, and continues till August or September.

Müller.

CANE. n. f. [canna, Lat.]

1. A kind of strong reed, of which walking staffs are made; a walking staff. See REED.

The king thrust the captain from him with his cane; whereupon he took his leave, and went home.

Harvey.

If the poker be out of the way, or broken, stir the fire with your master's cane.

Swift.

2. The plant which yields the sugar.

This cane or reed grows plentifully both in the East and West Indies. Other reeds have their skin hard and dry, and their pulp void of juice; but the skin of the sugar cane is soft, and the spongy matter or pith it contains very juicy. It usually grows four or five feet high, and about half an inch in diameter; though some have been mentioned in the island of Tabago twenty four feet high. The stem or stalk is divided by knots a foot and a half apart. At the top it puts forth a number of long green tufted leaves, from the middle of which arise the flower and the seed. There are likewise leaves springing out from each knot; but these usually fall as the cane rises. The ground fit for sugar canes is light, soft, and spongy, lying on a descent proper to carry off the water, and well turned to the sun. They usually plant them in pieces cut a foot and a half below the top of the flower, and they are ordinarily ripe in ten months, though sometimes not till fifteen; at which time they are found quite full of a white succulent marrow, whence is expressed the liquor of which sugar is made. When ripe, they are cut, their leaves cleared off, and they are carried in bundles to the mills, which consist of three wooden rollers, covered with steel plates.

Chambers.

And the sweet liquor on the cane bellow,

From which prepar'd the luscious sugars flow.

Blackmore.

3. A lance; a dart made of cane; whence the Spanish inaga de cañas.

Abenamar, thy youth these sports has known,

Of which thy age is now spectator grown;

Judge like thou wilt fly, to praise or to arraign,

The flying skirmish of the darted cane.

Dryden.

4. A reed.

Food may be afforded to bees, by small canes or troughs conveyed into their hives.

Mortimer.

TO CANE. v. a. [from the noun.] To beat with a walking staff.

CANICULAR. adj. [canicularis, Lat.] Belonging to the dog-star; as, canicular or dog-days.

In regard to different latitudes unto some, the canicular days are in the winter; as unto such as are under the equinoctial line; for, unto them, it ariseth, when the sun is about the tropic of Cancer, which season unto them is winter.

Brown's vulgar Errors.

CANINE. adj. [caninus, Lat.]

1. Having the properties of a dog.

A third kind of women are made up of canine particles: these are foids, who imitate the animals out of which they were taken, always busy and barking, and snarl at every one that comes in their way.

Addison.

2. Canine hunger, in medicine, is an appetite which cannot be satisfied.

It may occasion an exorbitant appetite of usual things, which they will take in such quantities, till they vomit them up like dogs, from whence it is called canine.

Arbutnot.

CANISTER. n. f. [canistrum, Lat.]

1. A small basket.

My lovely care,

Take the presents, which the nymphs prepare:

White lilies in full cassidors they bring.

With all the glories of the purple sycing.

Dryden.

2. A small vessel in which any thing, such as tea or coffee, is laid up.

CANKER. n. f. [cancer, Lat. It seems to have the same meaning and original with cancer, but to be accidentally written with a k, when it denotes bad qualities in a less degree; or, canker might come from chancer, Fr. and cancer from the Latin.]

1. A worm that preys upon, and destroys fruits.

And loathful illenness he doth detect,

The canker worm of every gentle breast.

Spenser.

That which the locust hath left, hath the canker worm eaten

Juel, i. 4.

NO XXI.

A huffing, thining, flatt'ring, cringing coward,

A canker worm of peace, was rais'd above him.

Orway.

2. A fly that preys upon fruits.

There be of flies, caterpillars, canker flies, and bear flies.

Wilton's Angler.

3. Any thing that corrupts or consumes.

Yet writers say, as in the sweetest bud

The eating canker dwells; so eating love

Inhabits in the finest wits of all

Shakspeare.

It is the canker and ruin of many mens estates, which, in process of time, breeds a publick poverty.

Bacon.

Sacrilege may prove an eating canker, and a consuming moth,

in the estate that we leave them

Attiebury.

No longer live the cankers of my count;

All to your several states with speed resort;

Walle in wild riot what your land allows,

There ply the early feast, and late caroule.

Pope.

4. A kind of wild worthless rose.

I'll put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose,

And plant this thorn, this canker Boleynbrake.

Shakspeare.

Draw a cheery with the leaf, the thall of a sterple, a single or canker rose

Pasdam.

5. An eating or corroding humour.

I am not glad, that such a fore of time

Should seek a plaister by a content'd trowl,

And heal th' inveterate canker of one wound,

By making many

Shakspeare.

6. Corrosion; virulence.

As with age his body uglier grows,

So his mind with cankers.

Shakspeare.

7. A disease in trees.

TO CANKER. v. n. [from the noun.] To grow corrupt.

'Tis that cunning architect of canker's guide,

Whom princes late displace left in bands,

For falsed letters, and fustured wile

Fairy Queen.

I will lift the down trod Mortimer

As high 't' th' air as this unthankful king,

As this ingrate and canker'd Boleynbrooke.

Shakspeare.

Silvering will fully and canker more than gilding; which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, will be profitable.

Bacon's typical Remains.

Or what the cross dire looking planet imite,

Or hurtful worm with canker'd venom bite.

Milton.

To some new clime, or to thy native fly;

Oh! friendless and forsaken virtue, fly:

The Indian air is deadly to thee grown;

Deceit and canker'd malice rule thy throne.

Dryden.

Let envious jealousy, and canker'd spite

Produce my actions to severest light,

And tax my open day, or secret night.

Prior.

TO CANKER. v. a.

1. To corrupt; to corrode.

Restore to God his due in tithe and time:

A tithe purloin'd, cankers the whole estate.

Herbert.

2. To infect; to pollute.

An honest man will enjoy himself better in a moderate fortune, that is gained with honour and reputation, than in an overgrown estate, that is cankered with the acquisitions of rapine and exaction.

Addison's Spectator.

CANKERBIT. particp. adj. [from canker and bite.] Bitten with an venomous tooth.

Know thy name is lost;

By treason's tooth baregawn and canker'd.

Shakspeare.

CANNABINE. adj. [cannabi us, Lat.] Hempen.

Ditt.

CANNIBAL. n. f. An anthropophagite; a man-eater.

The cannibals themselves eat no man's flesh, of those that die of themselves, but of such as are slain.

Bacon.

They were little better than cannibals, who do hunt one another; and he that hath most strength and swiftness, doth eat and devour all his fellows.

Davies.

It was my bent to speak,

Of the cannibal: that each other eat;

The anthropophagi, and men whose heads

Lid grow beneath their shoulders.

Shakspeare.

The captive cannibal, oppress with chains;

Yet braves his foes, reviles, provokes, disdains;

He bids defiance to the gaping crowd;

And spent at last, and speechless as he lies,

With fiery glances mocks their rage, and dies.

Gravil.

If an eleven commandment had been given, Thou shalt not eat human flesh; would not these cannibals have effected it more difficult than all the rest?

Fenly.

CANNIBALLY. adv. [from cannibal.] In the manner of a cannibal.

Before Cortioli, he scotcht him and notcht him like a carabado.—Had he been cannibally given, he might have broiled, and eaten him too.

Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

CANNIPERS. n. f. [corrupted from callipers; which see]

The square is taken by a pair of cannipers, or two rulers clapped to the side of a tree, measuring the distance between them.

Mortimer's History.

CANNON.

CANNON. n. f. [cannon, Fr. from canna, Lat. a pipe, meaning a large tube.]

1. A great gun for battery.
2. A gun larger than can be managed by the hand. They are of many sizes, that they decrease in the bore from a ball of forty-eight pounds to a ball of five ounces.

As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks,
So they redoubled strokes upon the foe.
He had left all the cannons he had taken; and now he lent all his great cannon to a garriſon.

The making, or price, of these gunpowder instruments, is extremely expensive, as may be easily judged by the weight of their materials; a whole cannon weighing commonly eight thousand pounds; a half cannon, five thousand; a culverin, four thousand five hundred; a demi-culverin, three thousand; which, whether it be in iron or brass, must needs be very costly.

Willis's Mathematical Magick.

CANNON-BALL. } n. f. [from cannon, ball, bullet, and shot.]
CANNON-BULLET. } The balls which are shot from great CANNON-SHOT. } guns.

He reckons those fur wounds that are made by bullets, although it be a cannon-shot.
Let a cannon-bullet pass through a room, it must strike successively the two sides of the room.

To CANNON'ADE v. n. [from cannon.] To play the great guns; to batter or attack with great guns.

Both armies cannonaded all the ensuing day.

To CANNON'ADE v. a. To fire upon the enemy with cannon.

CANNONIER. n. f. [from cannon.] The engineer that manages the cannon.

Give me the cups:

And let the kettle to the trumpets speak,
The trumpets to the cannons without.

The cannons to the heav'n, the heav'n to earth.

A third was a most excellent cannonier, whose good skill did much endamage the forces of the king.

CANNOT. A word compounded of can and not.

I cannot but believe many a child can tell twenty, long before he has any idea of infinity at all.

CANOA. } n. f. A boat made by cutting the trunk of a tree in CANOE. } to a hollow vessel.

Others made rafts of wood, and others devised the boat of one tree, called the canoa, which the Gauls, upon the river

Roan, used in assisting the transportation of Hannibal's army.

They maintained a war against Semiramis, in which they had four thousand monoxyla, or canoes, of one piece of timber.

Alsatian on Caint.

CANON. n. f. [κάνων.]

1. A rule; a law.

The truth is, they are rules and canons of that law, which is written in all men's hearts; the church had for ever, no less than now, stood bound to observe them, whether the apostle had mentioned them or no.

His books are almost the very canons to judge both doctrine and discipline by.

Religious canons, civil laws are cruel,

Then what should war be?

Canons in logic are such as these: every part of a division, singly taken, must contain less than the whole; and a definition must be peculiar and proper to the thing defined.

Watts's Logic.

2. The laws made by ecclesiastical councils.

Canon law is that law, which is made and ordained in a general council, or provincial synod of the church.

These were looked on as laps'd persons, and great severities of penance were prescribed them, as appears by the canons of Ancyra, and many others.

3. The books of Holy Scripture; or the great rule.

Canon also denotes those books of Scripture, which are received as inspired and canonical, to distinguish them from either profane, apocryphal, or disputed books. Thus we say, that Gospel is part of the sacred canon of the Scripture.

4. A dignity in cathedral churches.

For deans and canons, or prebends, of cathedral churches, in their first institution, they were of great use in the church; they were to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, and for his government in causes ecclesiastical.

Swift much admires the place and air,
And longs to be a canon there.

A canon that's a place too mean:
No, doctor, you shall be a dean,
Two dozen canons round your stall,
And you the tyrant o'er them all.

5. Canon Regular. Such as are placed in monasteries.

6. Canon Secular. Lay canons, who have been, as a mark of honour, admitted into some chapters.

7. [Among chirurgians.] An instrument used in sewing up wounds.

8. A large sort of printing letter, probably so called from being first used in printing a book of canons; or perhaps from its size, and therefore properly written canon.

CANON BIT. n. f. That part of the bit, let into the horse's mouth.

A goodly person, and could manage fast,
His barbican freed with canonit.

Who under him did trample as the air.

CANONIES. n. f. [canonists, low Lat.]

There are also, in popish countries, women which they call secular canonists, living after the example of secular canons.

Boyle's Paragon.

CANONICAL. adj. [canonicus, low Lat.]

1. According to the canon.

2. Constituting the canon.

Publick readings there are of books and writings, not canonic, whereby the church doth also preach, or openly make known the doctrine of virtuous conversation.

No such book was found amongst those canonical scriptures.

Raleigh's History of the World.

3. Regular; stated; fixed by ecclesiastical laws.

Seven times in a day do I praise thee, said David; from this definite number summeages of the church took their pattern for their canon hours.

4. Spiritual; ecclesiastical; relating to the church.

York anciently had a metropolitan jurisdiction over all the bishops of Scotland, from whom they had their consecration, and to whom they swore canonical obedience.

CANONICALLY. adv. [from canonicus.] In a manner agreeable to the canon.

It is a known story of the friar, who, on a fasting day, bids his capon be cap, and then very canonically eat it.

CANONICALNESS. n. f. [from canonicus.] The quality of being canonical.

CANONIST. n. f. [from canon.] A man versed in the ecclesiastical laws; a professor of the canon law.

John Fisher, bishop of Rochester, when the king would have translated him from that poor bishoprick, he refused, saying, he would not forsake his poor little old wife: thinking of the fifteenth canon of the Nicene council, and that of the canonists, Matrimonium inter episcopum & ecclesiam est contrahitum, &c.

Camden's Remains.

Of whose strange crimes no canonist can tell,
In what communion men's large contents they dwell.

CANONIZATION. n. f. [from canonize.] The act of declaring any man a saint.

It is very superstitious, that the interests of particular families, or churches, have too great a sway in their canonization.

Addison on Italy.

To CANONIZE. v. a. [from canon, to put into the canon, or rule for observing festivals.] To declare any man a saint.

The king, desirous to bring into the house of Lancaster ecclesiastical honour, became tutor to pope Julius, to canonize king Henry VI. for a saint.

By those hymns all shall approve

Us canoniz'd for love.

They have a pope too, who hath the chief care of religion, and of canonizing whom he thinks fit, and thence have the honour of saints.

CANONRY. } n. f. [from canon.] An ecclesiastical benefice in CANONSHIP. } some cathedral or collegiate church, which has a prebend, or a stated allowance out of the revenues of such church, commonly annexed to it.

CANONIED. adj. [from canon.] Covered with a canopy.

I sat me down to watch upon a bank,
With ivy canopied, and in eruvé

With flaunting honey-suckle.

CANOPY. n. f. [canopium, low Lat.] A covering of state over a throne or bed; a covering spread over the head.

She is there brought unto a paled green,
And placed under a stately canopy.

The warlike feats of both those knights to see.

Now spread the night her spangled canopy.

And summon'd every restless eye to sleep.

Nor will the raging leff's fire abate.

With golden canopies, and beds of state.

To CANOPY. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a canopy.

The birch, the myrtle, and the bay,
Like friends did all embrace;

And their large branches did display,
To canopy the place.

CANOROUS. adj. [canorus, Lat.] Musical; tuneful.

Birds that are most canorous, and whose notes we most commend, are of little throat, and short.

CAN I. n. f. [probably from canta, Lat. implying the odd tone of voice used by vagrants; but imagined by some to be corrupted from quant.]

1. A corrupt dialect used by beggars and vagabonds.

2. A parti'cular form of speaking peculiar to some certain class or body of men.

I write not always in the proper terms of navigation, land service, or in the cant of any profession.

If we would trace out the original of that flagrant and avowed impiety, which has prevailed among us for some years, we should find, that it owes its rise to that cant and hypocrisy, which had taken possession of the people's minds in the times of the great rebellion.

Addison's Freeholder.

Aitrologers, with an old pultry cant, and a few pot-books for planets, to amuse the vulgar, have too long been suffered to abuse the world.

Swift's Predilection for the Year 1701.

A few general rules, with a certain cant of words, has sometimes set up an illiterate heavy writer, for a most judicious and formidable critic.

Addison's Spectator.

3. A whining pretension to goodness, in formal and affected terms.

Of promise prodigal, while pow'r you want,

And preaching in the self-denying cant. Dryden's Aurengze.

4. Barbarous jargon.

The affectation of some late authours, to introduce and multiply cant words, is the most ruinous corruption in any language.

Swift.

5. Auction.

Numbers of these tenants, or their defendants, are now offering to sell their leases by cant, even those which were for lives.

Swift.

To CANT. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk in the jargon of particular professions, or in any kind of formal affected language, or with a peculiar and studied tone of voice.

Men cant endlessly about materia and forma; hunt chimeras by rules of art, or dress up ignorance in words of bulk or sound, which may stop up the mouth of enquiry.

Glanville's Stepby Scientific.

That uncouth affected garb of speech, or canting language rather, if I may so call it, which they have of late taken up, is the signal distinction and characteristic note of that, which, in that their new language, they call the godly party.

Sanderjous.

The busy, subtle serpents of the law,

Did first my mind from true rebeldence draw;

While I did limits to the king prescribe,

And took for oracles that canting tribe.

Refcommen.

Unskilful in fables, by planets to forebaw,

Like canting rascals, how the wars will go. Dryden's Javen.

CANTA'LIVER. See CANTILIVER.

CANTA'TA. n. f. [Ital.] A song.

CANTATION. n. f. [from cant, Lat.] The act of singing.

CANTER. n. f. [from cant, Lat.] A term of reproach for hypocrites, who talk formally of religion, without obeying it.

CANTERBURY BELLS. See BELLEVIER.

CANTERBURY GALLOP. [In horsemanship.] The hard gallop of an ambling horse, commonly called a canter; and probably derived from the monks riding to Canterbury on easy ambling horses.

CANTHARIDES. n. f. [Latin.] Spanish flies; used to raise blisters.

The flies, cantharides, are bred of a worm, or caterpillar, but peculiar to certain fruit trees; as are the fig tree, the pine tree, and the wild brier; all which bear sweet fruit, and fruit that hath a kind of secret biting or sharpness: for the fig hath a milk in it, that is sweet and corrosive; the pine apple hath a kernel that is strong and absterive.

Bacon's Nat. History.

CANTHUS. n. f. [Latin.] The corner of the eye. The internal is called the greater, and the external the lesser canthus.

Quincy.

A gentlewoman was seized with an inflammation and tumour in the great canthus, or angle of her eye.

Weyman.

CANTICLE. n. f. [from canto, Lat.] A song; used generally for a song in scripture.

Bacon's Holy War.

CANTILIVERS. n. f. Pieces of wood framed into the front or other sides of an house, to sustain the moulding and eaves over it.

Mason's sole technical Etymology.

CANTLE. n. f. [Hart, Dutch, a corner; of hantillon, Fr. a piece.] A piece with corners.

Skinner.

See how this river comes, me cranking in,

And cuts me from the best of all my land,

A huge halloo, a monstrous cantle out. Shakspeare's H. IV.

To CANTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut in pieces.

For four times talking, if one piece thou take,

That must be cantled, and the judge go snack. Dryden's Juu.

CANTLET. n. f. [from cant, Lat.] A piece; a fragment.

Raging with high disdain, repeats his blows;

Nor shield, nor armour can their force oppose;

Huge cantlets of his buckler strew the ground,

And no defence in his cantled arms is found.

Dryden.

CANTO. n. f. [Ital.] A book, or section of a poem.

Why, what would you do at?

—Make a willow cabin at your gate,

And call upon my soul within the house;

Write loyal cantos of contemned love. Shakspeare's Tw. Night.

CANTON. n. f. [from canton, Fr. the corner of the eye; and hence came the cantons of the Swissers. It is the reward of a prince given to an earl. Pezdam]

1. A small parcel or division of land.

Only that little canton of land, called the English pale, containing four small flures, did maintain a bordering war with the Irish, and retain the form of English government. Davies.

2. A small community, or clan.

The same is the case of rivers by land; such, as yet, are some cantons in Arabia, and some petty kings of the mountains, adjacent to flairs and ways.

Bacon's Holy War.

To CANTON. v. a. [from the noun.] To divide into little parts.

Families shall quit all subjection to him, and canton his empire into less governments for themselves.

Locke.

It would certainly be for the good of mankind, to have all the mighty empires and monarchies of the world *canton*ed out into petty states and principalities.

Addison on Italy.

The late king of Spain, reckoning it an indignity to have his territories *canton*ed out into parcels by other princes, during his own life, and without his consent, rather chose to bequeath the monarchy entire to a younger son of France.

Swift.

They canton out to themselves a little province in the intellectual world, where they fancy the light shines, and all the rest is in darkness.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

To CANTONIZE. v. a. [from canton.] To parcel out into small divisions.

Thus was all Ireland cantonized among ten persons of the English nation.

Davies on Ireland.

And ere the pens that did his pinions bind,

Were like main yards with flying canvasses bind. Fairy Queen.

Their canvasses cattles up they quickly rear,

And build a city in an hour's space.

Fairfax.

Where'er thy navy spreads her canvass wings,

Homage to thee, and peace to all the brins.

Waller.

With such kind passion hastes the prince to fight,

And spreads the flying canvass to the found;

Him whom no danger, were he there, could fright;

Now absent, every little nife can wound.

Dryden.

Thou, Kneller, long with noble pride,

The foremost of thy art, halt v'y'd

With nature in a generous strife,

And touch'd the canvass into life.

Addison.

To CANVASS. v. a. [Skinner derives it from canavasser, Fr. to beat hemp; which being a very laborious employment, it is used to signify, to search diligently into.]

Receiveth as the sea, nought enters there,
Of what validity and pitch so'er,
But falls into abatement and low price. Shakspeare.

For they that most and greatest things embrace,
Enlarge thereby their mind's capacity,
As streams enlarg'd, enlarge the channel's space. Devin.
Space, considered in length, breadth, and thickness, I think,
may be called capacity. Locke.

2. The power or power of the mind.
No intellectual creature in the world, is able, by capacit, to do that which nature doth without capacity and knowledge. Hobbes, l. i. § 5.

In spiritual natures, so much as there is of desire, so much there is also of capacit to receive. I do not say, there is always a capacity to receive the very thing they desire; for that may be impossible. Swiss.

An heroic poem requires the accomplishment of some extraordinary undertaking; which requires the strength and vigor of the body, the duty of a soldier, and the capacity and prudence of a general. Dryden's Jaro. Delia.

3. Power; ability.
Since the world's wide frame does not include
A cause with such capacities endu'd,
Some other cause o'er nature must prelide. Blount.

5. Room; space.
There remained, in the capacity of the exhausted cylinder, store of little rooms, or spaces, empty or devoid of air. Boyle.

6. State; condition; character.
A miraculous revolution, reducing many from the head of a triumphant rebellion, to their old condition of mafons, smiths, and carpenters; that, in this capacity, they might repair what as colonels and captains, they had ruined and defaced. Swiss.

You desire my thoughts as a friend, and not as a member of parliament; they are the same in both capacities. Swift.

CAPARISON. n. f. [caparazon, a great cloak, Span.] A horse-cloth, or a sort of cover for a horse, which is spread over his furniture. Farrier's Dict.

Tilting furniture, emblazon'd shields,
Impresses quiver, caparison, and steeds,
Bales, and tinsel trappings; gorgeous knights,
At joust, and tournament. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Some wore a breastplate, and a light jupon;
Their horses cloth'd with rich caparison. Dryden's Fables.

To CAPARISON. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress in caparisons.
At his command,
The steeds, caparison'd with purple, stand;
With golden trappings, glorious to behold,
And clasp between their teeth the flaming gold. Dryden.

2. To dress pompously; in a ludicrous sense.
Don't you think, though I am caparisoned like a man, I have a doublet and hose in my disposition? Shakspeare As you like it.

CAPE. n. f. [capra, Fr.]

1. Heading; promontory.
What from the cape can you discern at sea?—
—Nothing at all; it is a high wooded froud. Shakspeare Othello.

The parting fun,
Beyond the earth's green cape, and verdant isles,
Hesperian fets; my signal to depart. Paradise Lost.

The Romans made war upon the Tarentines, and obliged them by treaty not to fall beyond the cape. Arrian's Hist. Alex.

He was clothed in a robe of fine black cloth, with white sleeves and cape. Bacon.

CAPER. n. f. [from capra, Latin, a goat.] A leap; a jump; a skip.

We that are true lovers, run into strange capers; but as all is mortal in nature, so is all nature in love mortal in folly.

Shakspeare As you like it.

Flinnap, the treasurer, is allowed to cut a capra on the great rope, at least an inch higher than any other lord in the whole empire. Swift's Gulliver's Travels.

CAPER. n. f. [caparris, Lat.] An acid pickle. See CAPER-BUSH.

We invent new sauces and pickles, which resemble the animal.

animal ferment in taste and virtue, as mangoes, olives, and capers.

Feyr on the Humours.

CAPER BUSH. n. f. [cappari, Lat.]

In flower consists of four leaves, which are expanded in form of a rose; the fruit is fleshy, and shaped like a pear; in which are contained many roundish seeds. Its plant grows in the south of France, in Spain and in Italy, upon old walls and buildings; and the buds of the flowers, before they are open, are pickled for eating.

Miller.

TO CAPER. v. n. [from the noun.]

Expect with mortal pain.

Paradise Lst.

2. Criminal in the highest degree, so as to touch life.

Edmund, I arrest thee

On capital treason.

Shakspeare. K. Lear.

Several cases deferve greater punishment than many crimes that are capital among us.

Swift.

3. That which affords life.

In capital causes, wherein but one man's life is in question, the evidence ought to be clear; much more in a judgment upon a war, which is capital to thousands.

Bacon.

4. Chief; principal.

I will, out of that infinite number, reckon but some that are most capital, and commonly occurant both in the life and conditions of private men.

Spenser on Ireland.

As to serve in the least points, is error; so the capital enemies thereof God hanceth, as his deadly foes, aliens, and, without repentance, children of endless perdition.

Hooter.

They are employed by me, and do, in themselves, tend to confirm the truth of a capital crime in religion.

Atterbury.

5. Chief; metropolitan.

CAPRICHO. n. f. [capricho, Fr. capricho, Span.]

It is a pleasant spectacle to behold the shifts, windings, and unexpected caprichos of diffirent nature, when pursued by a close and well managed experiment.

4 A

Glanville.

Heaven's

Heav'n's great view is one, and that the whole;
That counterworks each folly and caprice,
That disappoints th' effect of every vice.
If there be a single spot more barren, or more distant from the church, the rector or vicar may be obliged, by the caprice or pique of the bishop, to build, under pain of sequestration.

Their passions move in lower spheres,
Where'er caprice or folly fleers.
All the various machines and utensils would now and then play odd pranks and caprices, quite contrary to their proper structures, and design of the artificers.

CAPRICIOUS, adj. [capriciosus, Fr.] Whimsical; fanciful; hummour-me.

CAPRICIOUSLY, adv. [from capriciosus] Whimsically; in a manner depending wholly upon fancy.

CAPRICIOUSNESS, n. f. [from capriciosus] The quality of being led by caprice; humour; whimsicalness.

be not apprised of them; or otherwise he must tax his prince of capriciousness, inconsistency, or ill design.

CAPRICORN, n. f. [capricornus, Lat.] One of the signs of the zodiac; the winter solstice.

Let the longest night in Capricorn be of fifteen hours, the day consequently must be of nine. Notes to Cress's Monist.

CAPRIGLE, n. f. [French. In horsemanship.] Caprile are leaps ferma à ferma, or such as a horse makes in one and the same place, without advancing forwards, and in such a manner, that when he is in the air, and height of his leap, he jerks or flukes out with his hinder legs, even and near. A caprile is the most difficult of all the high manage, or raised airs. It is different from the crouade in this, that he does not throw his shoes; and from a balade, in that he does not jerk out in a balade.

CAPSTAN, n. f. [corruptly called capstan; capstan, Fr.] A cylinder, with levers to wind up any great weight, particularly to raise the anchors.

The weighing of anchors by the capstan, is also new.

No more behold thee turn my watch's key,
As seamen at a capstan anchors weigh.

CAPSULAR, adj. [capsula, Lat.] Hollow like a chest.

CAPSULARY, adj. [capsula, Lat.] Hollow like a chest.
It ascendeth not directly unto the throat, but ascending first into a capsular reception of the breast-bone, it ascendeth again into the neck.

CAPSULATE, adj. [capsula, Lat.] Inclosed, or in a box.

CAPSULATED, adj. [capsula, Lat.] Inclosed, or in a box.
Seeds, such as are corrupted and stale, will swim; and this agreeth unto the seeds of plants locked up and capsulated in their husks.

The heart lies immured, or capsulated, in a cartilage, which incloses the heart, as the skull doth the brain.

CAPTAIN, n. f. [captain, Fr.]

1. A chief commander.

Our captains, Macbeth and Banquo?

2. The commander of a company in a regiment.

A captain! these villains will make the name of captain as obscure as the word occupy; therefore captains had need look to it.

The grim captain, in a fury tone,
Cries out, pack up, ye rascals, and be gone.

3. The chief commander of a ship.

The Rhodian captain, relying on his knowledge, and the lightness of his vessel, peck'd, in open day, through all the guards.

4. It was anciently written captain.

And evermore their cruel captain
Sought with his rascal routs to include them round.

5. Captain General. The general or commander in chief of an army.

To triumph like an Amazonian troll,
Upon their woes, whom fortune captivates?

That hall by tyranny thine many years
Walled our country, slain our citizen,
And sent our fous and husbands captivate.

He deserves to be a slave, that is content to have the royal sovereignty of his soul, and the liberty of his will, to be cap- tivated.

They stand firm, keep out the enemy, truth, that would cap- tivate or disturb them.

2. To charm; to overpower with excellence; to subdue.

And with nine circling streams the captives souls inclose.

TO CAPTIVE, v. a. [from the noun.] It was used formerly with the accent on the last syllable, but now it is on the first. To take prisoner; to bring into a condition of servitude.

But being all dead I have a few,
Rather than fly, or be captiv'd, her self the flew.

Of heathen and profane, their carcases
To dogs and fowls a prey, or else captiv'd.

What further fear of danger can there be?
Beauty, which captives all things, fit me free.

Still by the god: the nymph surpris'd,
Yet, mistress of herself, devis'd,

How the vagrant might intrude,
And captiv'd him, who captives all.

CAPTIVITY, n. f. [captivus, Fr. captivus, Low Lat.]

in any degree more or less.

We take care to flatter ourselves with imaginary hopes and prospects of future happiness. Addison.

5. The object of care, of caution, or of love.

O my poor kingdom, fick with civil blows!

When that my care could not with-hold thy riots,

What wilt thou do, when riot is thy care?

Flush'd were his cheeks, and glowing were his eyes:

Is the thy care? is the thy care? he cries.

Your safety, more than mine, was then my care:

Left of the guide bereft, the rudder lost,

Your ship should run against the rocky coast.

Dryden.

The wily fox,

Who lately filch'd the swart's callow care,

None taught the trees a nobler care to bear,

Or more improv'd the vegetable care.

Pope.

- To CARE. v. n.* [from the noun]

1. To be anxious or solicitous; to be in concern about any thing.

She cared not what pain he put her body to, since the better part, her mind, was laid under so much agony.

As the Germans, both in language and manners, copied from the Hungarians, so were they always at variance with them; and therefore much cared not, though they were by him subdued. Keller's History of the Turks.

Well, on my terms thou wilt not be my heir;

If thou care'st little, less shall be my care.

Dryden's Persius.

2. To be inclined to; to be disposed; with for or to.

Not caring to observe the wind,

Or the new sea explore.

The remarks are introduced by a compliment to the worth

To CARK. v. n. [cease, Saxon.] To be careful; to be solicitous; to be anxious.

It is now very little used, and always in an ill sense.

I do find what a blessing is chanced to my life, from such muddy abundance of carling agonies, to states which still be adherent.

What can be vainer, than to lavish out our lives in the search of trifles, and to lie carling for the unprofitable goods of this world?

Nothing can supersede our own carlings and contrivances for ourselves, but the assurance that God cares for us.

CARLE. n. f. [cearl, Saxon.] A mean, rude, rough, brutal man. We now use clerk.

The carle beheld, and saw his guest

Would fide depart, for all his subtle sleight.

Answer, thou carle, and judge this riddle right,

I'll frankly own thee for a cunning wight.

The editor was a covetous carle, and would have his pearls of the highest price.

CA'RLINE THISTLE. [carlina, Lat.] A plant; placed in the catalogues of simples in the college dispensatory, but rarely ordered in medicine.

CA'RINGS. n. f. [In a ship.] Timbers lying fore and aft, along from one beam to another; on these the ledges rest, on which the planks of the deck are made fast.

CA'RKMAN. n. f. [from cark and man.] A man whose employment it is to drive cars.

If the strong cause support thy walking hand,

Chairmen no longer shall the wall command;

E'en sturdy carman shall thy nod obey,

And rattling coaches stop to make thee waver.

CA'RMELITE. n. f. [carmelite, Fr.] A sort of pear; which ice, CA'RMINATIVE. adj. [supposed to be so called, as having vin carminis, the power of a charm.]

Carminatives are such things as dilute and relax at the same times, because wind occasions a spasm, or convulsion in some parts. Whatever promotes intestine perspiration, is carminative; for wind is perspirable matter retained in the body.

Carminative and diuretic

Will damp all pain in sympathetick.

CA'RK

CARMINE, n. f. A bright red or crimson colour, bordering on purple, used by painters in miniature. It is the most valuable product of the cochineal mastic, and of an excessive price. Chem. ers.

CARNAGE, n. f. [carnage, Fr. from caro, carnis, Lat.]

1. Slaughter; havoc; massacre.
He brought the king's forces upon them rather as to carnage than to fight, inasmuch as without any great loss or danger to themselves, the greatest part of the feditious were slain. Hayw.
2. Heaps of flesh.
Such a scent I draw
Of carnage, prey innumerable I and taste
The favour of death from all things there that live. Milton.
His ample maw, with human carnage fill'd,
A milky deluge next the giant fill'd. Pope.

CARNAL, adj. [carnal, Fr. carnalis, low Latin.]

1. Fleishly; not spiritual.
Thou dost justly require us, to submit our understandings to thine, and deny our carnal reason, in order to thy sacred mysteries and commands. King Charles.

Spiritual laws by carnal pow'r shall force
On every conscience.

Not such in carnal pleasure: for which cause,
Among the beasts no meat for thee was found. Milton.

A glorious apparition! had no doubt,
And carnal fear, that day dim'd Adam's eye.
He perceives plainly, that his appetite to spiritual things avenges, in proportion as his sensual appetite is indulged and encouraged; and that carnal desires kill not only the desire, but even the power of tastful proud delights. Attorney.

2. Lushful; lecherous; libidinous.
This carnal cut
Preys on the issue of his mother's body. Shakespeare.

CARNALITY, n. f. [from carnal.]

1. Fleishly lust; compliance with carnal desires.
If godly, why do they wallow and steep in all the carnalities
of the world, under pretence of christian liberty? South.
2. Grossness of mind.
He did not institute this way of worship, but because of the carnality of their hearts, and the proneness of that people to idolatry. Tillotson.

CARNALLY, adv. [from carnal.] According to the flesh; not spiritually.

Where they found men in diet, attire, furniture of house, or any other way observers of civility and decent order, such they reproved, as being carnally and earthly minded. Hooker, Preface.

In the sacrament we do not receive Christ carnally, but we receive him spiritually; and that of itself is a conjugation of blessings and spiritual graces. Taylor.

CARNALNESS, n. f. The same with carnality. Diet.

CARNATION, n. f. [carnes, Lat.] The name of the natural flesh colour; from whence perhaps the flower is named; the name of a flower. See CLOVEGILLFLOWER.

And lo the wretch! whose vile, whose infect lust
Laid this gay daughter of the spring in dust!

O punish him! or to th'Elysian shades
Dismiss his soul, where no carnation fades. Pope.

CARNELION, n. f. A precious stone.

The common carnelion has its name from its flesh colour; which is, in some of these stones, paler, when it is called the female carnelion; in others deeper, called the male. Hesiodus.

CARNEOUS, adj. [carneus, Lat.] Fleishy.

I have observed in a calf, the umbilical vessels to terminate in certain bodies, divided into a multitude of carneous papillæ.
Ray.

To CARNIFY, v. n. [from caro, carnis, Lat.] To breed flesh;
to turn nutriment into flesh.

At the same time I think, I deliberate, I purpose, I command: in inferior faculties, I walk, I see, I hear, I digest,
I sanguify, I carnify. Hale.

CARNIVAL, n. f. [carnaval, Fr.] The feast held in the popish countries before Lent.

The whole year is but one mad carnival, and we are voluptuous not so much upon desire or appetite, as by way of exploit and bravery. Decay of Piety.

CARNIVOROUS, adj. [from carnis and voro.] Fleish-eating;
that of which flesh is the proper food.

In birds there is no modification or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop or craw. Ray.

Man is by his frame, as well as his appetite, a carnivorous animal. Arbutnot.

CARNOSITY, n. f. [carnositæ, Fr.] Fleishy excrescences.

By this method, and by this course of diet, with sudorifics, the ulcers are healed, and that carnosity resolved. Wijeman.

CARNOUS, adj. [from caro, carnis, Lat.] Fleishy.

The first or outward part is a thick and carnous covering, like that of a walnut; the second, a dry and a sterculous coat, commonly called mace. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The muscle whereby he is enabled to draw himself together, the academists describe to be a distinct carnous muscle, extended to the ear. Ray.

CARON, or St. John's Bread. [foliqua, Lat.] A plant.

It hath a petalous flower, having many flamina, which grow from the divisions of the flower-cup; in the centre of which rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a fruit or pod, which is plain and fleshy, containing several roundish plain seeds.
This tree is very common in Spain, and in some parts of Italy, as also in the Levant, where it grows in the hedge, and produces a great quantity of long, flat, brown-coloured pods, which are thick, mealy, and of a twelfth tall. These pods are many times eaten by the poorer sort of inhabitants. Sims.

CAROCHE, n. f. [from carosse, Fr.] A coach; a carriage of pleasure. It is used in the comedy of Alibon-zar, but now it is obsolete.

CAROL, n. f. [carola, Ital. from chorola, Lat.]

1. A song of joy and exultation.
And let the Graces dance unto the rest,
For they can do it best:
The whiles the maidens do their carol sing,
To which the woods shall answer, and their echo ring. Spenser.

Even in the old testament, if you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many heart-like airs as carols. Bain.

Oppos'd to her, on either side advance
The costly feast, the carol, and the dance,
Minstrels and musick, poetry and play,
And balls by night, and tournaments by day. Dryden.

2. A song of devotion.
No night is now with hymn or carol blest.
They gladly thither haste: and, by a choir
Of squadron'd angels, hear his carol sing. Milton.

3. A song in general.
The carol they began that hour,
How that a life was but a flower,
In the spring time. Shakespeare.

To CAROL, v. n. [carolare, Ital.] To sing; to warble; to sing in joy and felicity.

Hark, how the cheerful birds do chant their lays,
And carol of love's praise. Spenser.

'Tis done, the sung, and caroll d'out so clear,
That men and angels might rejoice to hear. Dryden.

How ring swans their throats relax'd
From native silence, carol sounds harmonious. Prior.

To CAROL, v. a. To praise; to celebrate.
For which the shepherds at their festivals,
Carol her goodness loud in rustic lays. Milton.

CAROTID, adj. [carotidis, Lat.] Two arteries which arise out of the ascending trunk of the aorta, near where the subclavian arteries arise.

The carotid, vertebral, and splenic arteries, are not only violently contorted, but also here and there dilated, to moderate the motion of the blood; so the veins are also variously dilated. Ray.

CAROUSAL, n. f. [from carotæ.] It seems more properly pronounced with the accent upon the second syllable; but Dryden accents it on the first. A festival.

This game, these carousals Africanus taught,
And building Alba to the Latins brought. Dryden.

To CAROUSE, v. n. [carousar, Fr. from gar anse, all out,
Germ.] To drink; to quaff; to drink largely.

He calls for wine: a healthy, quoth he, as if H'ad been aboard carousing to his mates Shakespeare.

After a storm.
Learn with how little life may be preserved,
In gold and myrrh they need not to carouse. Raleigh.

Now hats fly off, and youths carouse,
Healths first go round, and then the house, Swilley.

The birds came thick and thick.
Under the shadow of friendly boughs
They sit carousing, where their liquor grows. Waller.

To CAROUSE, v. a. To drink.
Now my fick fool, Roderigo,
Whom love hath turn'd almost the wrong side out,
To Deidamonia hath tonight carous'd Shakespeare.

Potations pottle deep.
Our cheerful quaffs carouse the sparkling tears
Of the rich grapes, whilst musick chains their cars. Deane.

CAROUSE, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A drinking match.
Waste in wild riot what your land allows,
There ply the early feast, and late carouse. Pope.

2. A hearty dose of liquor.
He had for many eyes watching over him, as he could not drink a full carouse of sack; but the state was advertised thereof within few hours after. Deane.

Please you, we may contrive this afternoon
And quaff carouses to our mistresses' health. Shakespeare.

CAROUSE, n. f. [from carouse.] A drinker; a toper.

The bold carouser, and advent'ring dam;
Nor fear the fever, nor refuse the flame; Swift.

C A R

Safe in his skill from all constraint set free,
But conscious shame, remorse, and piety.

Granville.

CARP. n. f. [carpe, Fr.] A pond fish.

A friend of mine stored a pond of three or four acres with carps and tench.

Hale.

† CARP. v. n. [carpo, Lat.] To censure; to cavi; to find fault; with at before the thing or person censured.

Tertallian, even often through discontentment, carpet inju-riously at them, as though they did it even when they were free from such meaning.

Hooker.

This your all licens'd fool
Does hourly carp and quarrel, breaking forth

Shakespeare.

In rank and not to be endured riots.

No, not a tooth or nail to scratch,

And at my actions carp or watch.

Herbert.

When I spoke,
My honest homely words were carp'd, and censur'd,
For want of courtly title.

Dryden.

CARPENTER. n. f. [charpentier, Fr.] An artificer in wood; a builder of houses and ships. He is distinguished from a joiner, as the carpenter performs larger and stronger work.

This work performed with advantage good,

Godfrey his carpenter, and men of skill,

In all the camp, sent to an aged wood.

Fairfax.

In building Hiero's great ship, there were three hundred carpenters employed for a year together.

Wilkins.

In burden'd vessels, first with speedy care,

His plentiful stores do season'd timbers send,

Thither the brawny carpenters repair,

And, as the fargeous of main'd ships, attend.

Dryden.

CARPENTRY. n. f. [from carpenter.] The trade or art of a carpenter.

It had been more proper for me to have introduced carentry before joinery, because necessity did doubtless compel our forefathers to use the convenience of the first, rather than the extravagancy of the last.

Atterton.

CARPER. n. f. [from to carp.] A caviller; a censorious man.

I have not thee these weeds,

Shakespeare.

By putting on the cunning of a carper.

CARPET. n. f. [carpet, Dutch.]

1. A covering of various colours, spread upon floors or tables.

Be the jacks fair within, the jills fair without, carpets laid,

And every thing in order.

Shakspeare.

Against the wall, in the middle of the hall-space, is a chair placed before him, with a table and carpet before it.

Bacon.

2. Ground variegated with flowers, and level and smooth.

Go signify as much, while here we march

Upon the grassy carpet of this plain.

Shakspeare.

The carpet ground shall be with leaves o'erspread,

And boughs shall weave a covering for your head.

Dryden.

3. Any thing variegated.

The whole dry land is, for the most part, covered over with a lovely carpet of green grass, and other herbs.

Roy.

4. Carpet is used, proverbially, for a state of ease and luxury; as, a carpet knight, a knight that has never known the field, and has recommended himself only at table.

He is knight, dubbed with unlicked rapier, and on carpet consideration.

Shakspeare.

5. To be on the carpet, [sur le tapis, Fr.] is the subject of consideration; an affair in hand.

† CARPET. v. a. [from the noun.] To spread with carpets.

We found him in a fair chamber, richly hang'd and carpeted under foot, without any degrees to the state; he was set upon a throne, richly adorned, and a rich cloth of state over his head, of blue satin embroidered.

Bacon.

The dry land surface we find every where almost naturally covered over with grass, and other agreeable wholesome plants.

Dehman's Physico-theology.

CARPING. particip. adj. [from to carp.] Captious; censorious.

No carping critic interrupts his praise;

No real flatter, but for a second place.

Granville.

Lay aside therefore a carping spirit, and read even an adversary with an honest design to find out his true meaning; do not snatch at little lapses, and appearances of mistake.

Watts.

CARPINGLY. adv. [from carping.] Captiously; censoriously.

We dive out of the Latin at second hand by the French, and make good English, as in these adverbs, carpingly, currently, actively, colourably.

Garden.

CARPMAINS. n. f. A kind of coarse cloth made in the North of England.

Phillips.

CARPUS. n. f. [Latin.] The wrist, so named by anatomists, which is made up of eight little bones, of different figures and thickness, placed in two ranks, four in each rank. They are strongly tied together by the ligaments which come from the radius, and by the annular ligament.

Quincy.

I found one of the bones of the carpus lying loose in the wound.

CARACK. See CARACK.

CARAT. See CARAT.

CARAWAY. See CARAWAY.

Nay, you shall see mine orchard, where, in an arbour, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own grafting, with a dish of carraways, and so forth; come, cousin, silence, and then to bed.

C A R

Shakspeare.

CARRIAGE. n. f. [carriage, Fr. baggage; from carry.]

1. The act of carrying or transporting, or bearing any thing.

The unequal agitation of the winds, though material to the carriage of sounds farther or less way, yet do not confound the articulation.

Bacon.

If it seem so strange to move this obelisk for so little space, what may we think of the carriage of it out of Egypt?

Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

2. Conquest; acquisition.

Solyman resolved to besiege Vienna, in good hope, that, by the carriage away of that, the other cities would, without resistance, be yielded.

Knelser.

3. Vehicle; that in which any thing is carried.

What horse or carriage can take up and bear away all the loppings of a branchy tree at once?

Watts.

4. The frame upon which cannon is carried.

He comman'd the great ordnance to be laid upon carriages, which before lay bound in great unwieldy timber, with rings fastened thereto, and could not handily be removed to or fro.

Knelser.

5. Behaviour; personal manners.

Before his eyes he did cast a mist, by his own insinuation, and by the carriage of his youth, that expected a natural princely behaviour.

Bacon.

Though in my face there's no affected frown,

Nor in my carriage a feign'd niceness shewn,

I keep my honour still without a stain.

Dryden.

Let them have ever so learned lectures of breeding, that which will most influence their carriage, will be the company they converse with, and the fashion of those about them.

Locke.

6. Conduct; measures; practices.

You may hurt yourself; nay, utterly

Grow from the king's acquaintance by this carriage.

Shakspeare. Henry VIII.

He advised the new governour to have so much discretion in his carriage, that there might be no notice taken in the exercise of his religion.

Clarendon.

7. Management; manner of transacting.

The manner of carriage of the business, was as if there had been feign'd inquisition upon him.

CARRIERS. n. f. [from to carry.]

Bacon.

1. One who carries something.

You must distinguish between the motion of the air, which is but a vehiculum carum, a carrier of the sounds, and the sounds conveyed.

Bacon.

For winds, when homeward they return, will drive

The loaded carriers for their evening hive.

Dryden.

I have rather made it my choice to transcribe all, than to venture the loss of my originals by post or carrier.

Pierce.

The roads are crowded with carriers, laden with rich manufactures.

Swift.

3. A messenger; one who carries a message.

The welcome news is in the letter found;

The carrier's not commission'd to expand;

It speaks itself.

Dryden.

4. The name of a species of pigeon, so called from the reported practice of some nations, who send them with letters tied to their necks, which they carry to the place where they were bred, however remote.

There are tame and wild pigeons, and of tame there are croppers, carriers, runts.

Watts's Angler.

CARRION. n. f. [carcass, Fr.]

1. The carcase of something not proper for food.

They did eat the dead carriam, and one another's son after;

infirm that the very carcases they scraped out of their graves.

Spenser on Ireland.

It is I,

That, lying by the violet in the fun,

Do, as the carrian does, not as the flower.

Shakspeare.

This foul deed shall fill me about the earth,

With carrian men groaning for burial.

Shakspeare.

You'll ask me why I rather chuse to have

A weight of carrian flesh, than to receive

Three thousand ducats.

Shakspeare.

Ravens are seen in flocks where a carrian lies, and wolves in herds to run down a deer.

Temple.

Sheep, oxen, horses fall; and heap'd on high,

The dusting species in confusion lie,

Till, warn'd by frequent ills, the way they found,

To lodge their loathsome carrian under ground.

Dryden.

Criticks, as they are birds of prey, have ever a natural inclination to carrian.

Page.

2. A name of reproach for a worthless woman.

Shall we send that foolish carrian, Mrs. Quickly, to him, and excuse his throwing into the water.

Shakspeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

3. Any flesh so corrupted as not to be fit for food.

Not all that pride that makes thee swell,
As big as thou dost blown up real;

Nor

Nor all thy tricks and flights to cheat,
Sill all thy carion for good meat. Hudibras.
The wolves will get a breakfast by my death,
Yet scarce enough their hunger to satisfy. Dryden.
For love has made me carion ere I die.
CARNION, adj. [from the subst.] Relating to carcases; feeding upon carcases.

Match to match I have encounter'd him,
And made a prey for carion kites and crows; Shakespeare.
Ev'n of the bonny beats he lov'd so well.
The charity of our death-bed visits from one another, is much at a rate with that of a carion crow to a sheep; we smell a carcase. L'Estrange.

CARROT, n. f. [carotte, Fr. daucus, Lat.]
It hath a fleshy root; the leaves are divided into narrow segments; the petals of the flower are unequal, and shaped like a umbel; when ripe, is hollowed and contracted, appear; somewhat like a bird's nest; the seeds are hairy, and in pearling of lice. The species are; 1. Common wild carrot. 2.
Dwarf wild carrot, with broader leaves. 3. Dark red-rooted Garden carrot. 4. The orange coloured carrot. 5. The white Garden carrot. The fluff grows wild upon arable land, and is seldom cultivated. This is the particular root which should be used in medicine, and for which the druggists commonly sell the seeds of the garden carrot. The third and fourth sorts are commonly cultivated for the kitchen; as is the fifth sort, though not so common in England. The white is generally preferred for the sweetest. But, in order to preserve carrots for use all the winter and spring, about the beginning of November, when the green leaves are decayed, dig them up, and lay them in sand in a dry place, where the frost cannot come to them. Müller.
Carrots, though garden roots, yet they do well in the fields for feed, though the land for them should rather be dug than plowed. Mortimer.

His spouse orders the sack to be immediately opened, and greedily pulls out of it half a dozen bunches of carrots. Dennis.

CARROTINESS, n. f. [from carrot.] Redness of hair.

CARROT, adj. [from carrot.] Spoken of red hair, on account of its resemblance in colour to carrots.

CARRIAGES, n. f. [an Irish word.]

The carrivats are a kind of people that wander up and down to gentlemen's houses, living only upon cards and dice; who, though they have little or nothing of their own, yet will they play for much money. Sponser.

To CARRY, v. a. [charier, Fr. from currus, Lat. See CAR.]

1. To convey from a place; opposed to bring, or convey to a place.
When he dieth, he shall carry nothing away. Psalms.
And devout men carry Stephen to his burial.
I mean to carry her away this evening, by the help of these two fellows. Dryden.

As in a hive's vimeous dome,
Ten thousand bees enjoy their home;
Each does her studious action vary,
To go and come, to fetch and carry. Prior.

They expended their goods with the price marked upon them, then retired; the merchants came, left the price which they would give upon the goods, and likewise retired; the Seres returning, carried off either their goods or money, as they liked best. Arbutnot.

2. To transport.
They began to carry about in beds those that were sick.
Mark, vi. 55.

through the air, than the species of visibles. Bacon.

Where many great ordnance are shot off together, the sound will be carried, at the least, twenty miles upon the land. Bacon.

3. To bear; to have about one.

Do not take out boxes like furgeons I have met with, who carry them about in their pockets. Wilmot.

4. To take; to have with one.

If the ideas of liberty and volition were carried along with us in our minds, a great part of the difficulties that perplex minds thoughts would be easier resolved. Locke.

I have listened with my utmost attention for half an hour to an orator, without being able to carry away one single sentence out of a whole sermon. Swift.

5. To convey by force.

Go, carry Sir John Falstaff to the Fleet; Shakespeare.

Take all his company along with him.

6. To effect any thing.

There are some vain persons, that whatsoever goeth alone, or moveth upon greater means, if they have never so little hand in it, they think it is that they carry it. Bacon.

Off-times we lose the occasion of carrying a business well thoroughly by our too much haste. Ben. Jonson.

These advantages will be of no effect, unless we improve them to words, in the carrying of our main point. Addison.

7. To gain in competition.

And hardly shall I carry out my side,
Her husband being alive. Shakespeare.

How many stand for consulships? — Three, they say; but it is thought of every one Coriolanus will carry it. Shakespeare.

I see not yet how many of these six reasons can be voided; and yet if any of them hold good, it is enough to the cause. Saunders.

He latter still enjoying his place, and continuing a joint commissioner of the treasury, still opposed, and commonly car- ried away every thing against him. Clericus.

8. To gain after resistance.

The count votes your daughter,

Lays down his waiston siege before her beauty;

Relieves to carry her; let her consent,

As we'll direct her now, 'tis best to bear it. Shakespeare.

What a fortune does the thick lips owe,

If he can carry her thus? Shakespeare.

The town was distressed, and ready for an assault, which, if it had been given, would have cost much blood; but yet the town would have been carried in the end. Bacon.

9. To prevail; with it. [le porteur, Fr.]

Are you all resolved to give your voices?

But that's no matter; the greater part carries it. Shakespeare.

By these, and the like arts, they promised themselves, that they should easily carry it; so that they entertained the house

all the morning with other debates. Clericus.

If the numerosness of a train must carry it, virtue may go follow Altraxa, and vice only will be worth the courting. Guar.

Children, who live together, often strive for mastery, while willis shall carry it over the rest. Locke.

In pleasures and pains, the present is apt to carry it, and to

at a distance have the disadvantage in the comparison. Locke.

10. To bear out; to face through; to outface

If a man carries it off, there is so much money saved; and if he be detected, there will be something pleasant in the lick. L'Estrange.

11. To preserve external appearance.

My niece is already in the belief that he's mad; we may carry it thus for our pleasure, and his penance. Shakespeare.

12. To manage; to transact.

The senate is generally as numerous as our house of commons; and yet carries its resolutions so privately, that they are teldom known. Addison.

13. To behave; to conduct; with the reciprocal pronoun.

Neglect not also the examples of those that have carried themselves ill in the same place. Bacon.

He attended the king into Scotland, where he did carry himself with much singular sweetness and temper. Hume.

He carried himself so insolently in the house, and out of the house, to all persons, that he became odious. Clericus.

14. To bring forward; to advance in any progress.

It is not to be imagined how far constancy will carry a man;

however, it is better walking slowly in a rugged way, than to break a leg and be a cripple. Locke.

This plain natural way, without grammar, can carry them to a great degree of elegance and politeness in their language.

Locke on Education.

There is no vice which mankind carries to such wild ex-trems, as that of avarice. Swift.

15. To urge; to bear on with some kind of external impulse.

Men are strongly carried out to, and hardly took off from,

the practice of vice. South.

He that the world, or flesh, or devil, can carry away from the profession of an obedience to Christ, is no son of the faithful Abraham. Hammel.

Ill nature, passion, and revenge, will carry them too far in punishing others; and therefore God hath certainly appointed government to restrain the partiality and violence of men.

Locke.

16. To bear; to have; to obtain.

In some vegetables, we see something that carries a kind of analogy to sense; they contract their leaves against the cold;

they open them to the favourable heat. Hall.

17. To exhibit to show; to display on the outside; to let to view.

The aspect of every one in the family carries so much satisfaction, that it appears he knows his happy lot. Addison.

18. To imply; to import.

It carries too great an imputation of ignorance, lightness or folly, for men to quit and renounce their former tenets, presently upon the offer of an argument, which they cannot immediately answer. Locke.

19. To contain.

He thought it carried something of argument in it, to prove that doctrine. Watts.

20. To have annexed; to have any thing joined.

There was a righteous and a searching law, directly forbidding such practices; and they knew that it carried with it the divine stamp. South.

There are many expressions, which carry with them to my mind no clear ideas. Locke.

The obvious portions of extension, that affect our senses, carry with them into the mind the idea of finite. Locke.

21. To convey or bear any thing united or adhering, by communication of motion.

We see also manifestly, that sounds are carried with wind; and

and therefore sounds will be heard further with the wind than against the wind. Bacon.

Taking the very refuse among those which served to no use, he hath carved it diligently when he had nothing else to do. Isidore xiii. 13.

Had Demetrius really carved mount Athos into a statue of Alexander the Great, and had the memory of the fact been obliterated by some accident, who could afterwards have proved it impossible, but that it might casually have been? Beattie.

2. To cut meat at the table.

3. To make any thing by carving or cutting.

Yet fearing idleness, the uncle of ill,

In sculpture exercis'd his happy skill; 4 C

And carv'd in iv'ry such a maid so fair,
As nature could not with his art compare,
Were she to work.

Dryden.

4. To engrave.

O Rosalind! these trees shall be my books,
And in their barks my thoughts I'll character;
That every eye, which in this forest looks,
Shall see thy virtue writ in every tree.
Run, run, Orlando, carve on every tree,
The fair, the chaste, the unespous'd lie.

Shakespeare.

5. To carve one's own part.

He had been a keeper of his flocks, both from the violence of robbers and his own soldiers; who could easily have carved themselves their own food.

South.

How dares sinful dust and ashes invade the prerogative of providence, and carve out to himself the seasons and issues of life and death?

South.

The labourer's share, being seldom more than a bare subsistence, never allows that body of men opportunity to struggle with the richer, unless when some common and great distress emboldens them to carve to their wants.

Lact.

6. To cut; to hew.

Or they will buy his sheep forth of the cote,
Or they will carve the shepherd's throat.

In each seven small brais and leather guns, charged with case-shot.

Carleton.

CASE, n. f. [causa, Lat.]

1. Condition with regard to outward circumstances.

Unworthy wretch, quoth he, of so great grace
How dare I think such glory to attain?

These that have it attain'd, were in like case,
Quoth he, as wretched, and liv'd in like pain.

Spenser.

Question your royal thoughts, make the case yours;
Be now a father, and provoke a son.

Shakespeare.

Some knew the face,
And all had heard the much lamented case.

Dryden.

These were the circumstances under which the Countess then were, and the argument which the apostle advances, is intended to reach their particular case.

Astrucy.

My youth may be made, as it never fails in execution, a case of compassion.

Pope.

2. State of things.

He saith, that if there can be found such an inequality between man and man, as there is between man and beast, or between soul and body, it invetheth a right of government, which seemeth rather an impossible case, than an untrue sentence.

Bacon.

Here was the case, an army of English, wasted and with a long winter's siege, engaged an army of a greater number than themselves, both in strength and in vigour.

Bacon.

I can but be a slave where-ever I am; so that taken or not taken, 'till all a case to me.

L'Estrange.

They are excellent in order to certain ends; he hath no need to use them, as the case now stands, being provided for with the provision of an angel.

Taylor.

Your parents did not produce you much into the world, whereby you have fewer ill impressions; but they failed, as is generally the case, in too much neglecting to cultivate your mind.

Swift.

3. In physics; state of the body.

It was well; for we had rather met with calm and contrary winds, than any tempests; for our sick were many, and in very ill case.

Bacon.

Chalybeate water seems to be a proper remedy in hypochondriacal cases.

Astrucy.

4. In ludicrous language, condition with regard to leanness, or health.

Thou liest, most ignorant monster, I am in case to juggle a conffable.

Shakespeare.

Pray have but patience till then, and when I am in little better case, I'll throw myself in the very mouth of you.

L'Estrange.

Quoth Ralph, I should not, if I were
In case for action, now be here.

Halliwell.

For if the fire be faint, or out of case,
He will be copy'd in his famili'd race.

Dryden.

The priest was pretty well in case,
And shew'd some humour in his face;

Look'd with an easy careless mien,
A perfect stranger to the spleen.

Swift.

5. Contingence.

The atheist, in case things should fall out contrary to his belief or expectation, hath made no provision for this case; it is, contrary to his confidence, it should prove in the issue that there is a God, the man is lost and undone for ever.

Tillotson.

6. Question relating to particular persons or things.

Well do I find each man most wife in his own case.

Scribner.

It is strange, that the ancient fathers should not appeal to this judge, in all cases, it being so short and expedite a way for the ending of controversies.

Tillotson.

7. Representation of any fact or question.

If he be not apt to beat over matters, and to call up one things, to prove and illustrate another, let him study the lawyers cases: to every defect of the mind may have a special receipt.

Bacon.

8. I he variation of nouns.

The several changes which the noun undergoes in the Latin and Greek tongues, in the several numbers, are called cases, and are designed to express the several values or relations under which the mind considers things with regard to one another; and the variation of the noun for this purpose is call'd declension.

Clark.

In case. [ad case, Ital.] If it should happen; upon the supposition that: a form of speech now little used.

L'Estrange.

For is case it be certain, hard it cannot be for them to shew to white we shall find it; that we may say they were the orders of the apothecary.

As to his forces, in case they should have an ill day, or unluckily chance in the field.

This would be the accomplishment of their common fellows, in case, either by their evil destiny or advice, they suffered not the occasion to be lost.

75. CASE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put in a case or cover.

Cry ye, case ye; on with your vizours; there's money of the king's coming down the hill

The cry went once for thee,

And still it might, and yet it may again,

If thou wouldst not entomb thyself alive,

And case thy reputation in a tent.

On whose luxuriant herbage, half conceal'd,

Like a fall'n cedar, far didst thou'st train,

Could in green scales, the crocodile extends.

2. To cover as a case.

Then comes my fit again, I had else been perfect;

As broad, and general, as the casings air,

To lucky doubts and fears

3. To cover on the outside with materials different from the interior.

Then they began to case their houses with marble

4. To slip off the covering; to take off the skin.

We'll make you some sport with the fox ere we case him.

76. CASE, v. n. To put cases; to continue representations of facts.

They fell presently to reasoning and casings upon the matter with him, and laying distinctions before him.

77. CASHER, v. a. [from case and harden.] To harden on the outside.

The manner of case-hardening is thus: Take cow horn or horn, dry it thoroughly in an oven, then beat it to powder; then pour about the same quantity of bay salt to it, and mingle them together with stale chamberly, or else white wine vinegar.

Take some of this mixture upon loam, and cover your iron all over with it; then wrap the loam about all, and lay it upon the hearth of the forge to dry and harden. Put it into the fire, and blow up the coals to it, till the whole lump have become a blood-red heat.

78. CASIMATE, n. f. [from casu armatus, Ital. casamato, Span. a vault formerly made to separate the platforms of the lower and upper batteries.]

1. [In fortification.] A kind of vault or arch of stone-work, in that part of the flank of a bastion next the curtain, somewhat raised or drawn back towards the capital of the bastion, serving as a battery to defend the face of the opposite bastion,
and the moat or ditch.

2. The well, with its several subterraneous branches, dug in the pillage of the bastion, till the miner is heard at work, and air given to the mine.

79. CASIMENT, n. f. [from casamenti, Ital.] A window opening upon high.

Why, then may you have a casement of the great chamber window, where we play open, and the moon may shine in the casement.

Here in this world they do much knowledge read,
And are the casements which admit most light.

They, waken'd with the noise did fly
From inward room to window eye,
And gently opening lids, the casement,
Look'd out, but yet with some amazement.

There is as much difference between the clear representations of the understanding than, and the obscure discoveries that it makes now, as there is between the prospect of a casement and a key-hole.

80. CASINGS, n. f. [from casus, Lat.] Resembling cheese; cheesy.

Its fibrous parts are from the casius parts of the chyle.

81. CASERN, n. f. [from caserna, Fr.] A little room or lodgement erected between the rampart and the houses of fortified town; to serve as apartments or lodgings for the soldiers of the garrison, with beds.

82. CASFORM, n. f. [from case and form.] A grub that make itself a case.

Caddises, or casiforms, are to be found in this nation, in feverol difficult countries, and in several little brooks.

83. CASH, n. f. [from cash, Fr. a chest.] Money; properly ready money; money in the chest, or at hand.

A thief, bent to unhoard the cash

Of some rich baron.

He is at an end of all his cash; he has both his law and his daily bread now upon trust.

He sent the thief, that stole the cash, away,

And punish'd him ther put it in his way.

84. CASH-KEEPER, n. f. [from cash and keep.] A man entrusted with the money.

Dispendator was properly a cash-keeper, or privy-parler.

85. CASHMENT, n. f. [from cash and ment.] A suit of cloth.

CASHMENT, n. f. A tree.

The cup of the flower, which is produced at the extremity of a footstalk, is oblong and quincunx; the flower consists of one leaf, which is divided into five long narrow segments;
in the bottom of the calyx is the ovary, which becomes a foot pear-shaped fruit; upon the apex of which grows a vessel, in which is contained one kidney-shaped seed. This tree is very common in Jamaica and Barbadoes, where it grows very large, but in England will rarely stand through our winters.
The inhabitants of the West Indies plant them from branches taken from the old trees; which, with them, take root very well, and in two years time produce fruits.

86. CASHIER, n. f. [from cash.] He that has charge of the money.

If a steward or cashier be suffered to run on, without bringing him to a reckoning, such a fortify forbearance will teach him to shuffle.

A Venetian, finding his son's expences grow very high, ordered his cashier to let him have no more money than what he could count when he received it.

Flight of cashiers, or mobs, he'll never mind;

And knows no losses, while the mule is kind.

79. CASHIER, v. a. [from cash, Fr. cashier, Lat.]

1. To discard; to dismiss from a post, or a society, with reproach.

Does't not go well? Cassio hath beaten thee.

And thou by that small hurt hast cashier'd Cassio.

Seconds in factions many times prove principals; but many times also they prove cyphers, and are cashier'd.

If I had omitted what he said, his thoughts and words being thus cashier'd in my hands, he had no longer been Lucretius.

They have already cashier'd several of their followers as mutineers.

The ruling rogue, who dreads to be cashier'd,

Contrives, as he is hated, to be fear'd.

2. It seems, in the following passages, to signify the same as to annul; to vacate; which is sufficiently agreeable to the derivation.

If we should find a father corrupting his son, or a mother her daughter, we must charge this upon a peculiar anomaly and balance of nature; if the name of nature may be allowed to that which seems to be utter cashiering of it, and deviation from, and a contradiction to, the common principles of humanity.

Some, out of an overfondness of that darling invention, cashiers, or at least endeavour to invalidate, all other arguments, and forbid us to hearken to those proofs, as weak or fallacious.

80. CASK, n. f. [from casque, Fr. cadet, Lat.]

1. A barrel; a wooden vessel to stop up liquor or provisions.

The patient turning himself abed, it makes a fluctuating kind of noise, like the rumbling of water in a cask.

Perhaps tomorrow he may change his wine,
And drink old sparkling Alban, or Setine,
Whole tide, and whole age, with mould o'ergrown,
The good old cask for ever keeps unknown.

2. It has cask in a kind of plural sense, to signify the commodity or provision of casks.

Great inconveniences grow by the bad cask being commonly so ill seasoned and conditioned, as that a great part of the beer is ever lost and cast away.

81. CASK, n. f. [from casque, Fr. casque, Lat.] A helmet; armour

82. CASQUE, n. f. [from casque, Fr. casque, Lat.] A helmet; armour

Let thy blows, doubly redoubled,
Fall like amazing thunder on the casque

Of thy pernicious enemy.

And these
Sling weighty stones, when from afar they fight;
Their casques are cork, a covering thick and light.

What are his aims? why does he loze with darts
His trembling hands, and crush beneath a cask

His wrinkled brows?

83. CASKET, n. f. [a diminutive of casque, a chest, casque, casquette, Fr.]

A small box or chest for jewel, or things of particular value.

O ignorant poor man! what dust thou bear,
Lock'd up within the casket of the breast?

What jewels, and what riches halt thou there?
What heav'nly treasure in so weak a chest?

They found him dead, and cast into the streets,
An empty casket, where the jewel, like,
By some damn'd hand was robb'd, and ta'en away.

'His opinion supercedes and casuats the best medium we have.

CASSATION. n. f. [casatio, Lat.] A making null or void. D.
CASSAVI. } n. f. An American plant.
CASSADA. }

It has a short spreading bell-shaped flower, consisting of one leaf, cut into several parts, whose point afterwards becomes a roundish fruit, composed of three cells joined together, each containing one oblong seed. To these notes should be added, male flowers having no point, and which, growing round the female flower, fall off, and are never fruitful. The species are six: 1. The common casavi, or casada. 2. The most prickly casavi, with a chaste-tree leaf. 3. Tree-like less prickly casavi, with white flowers growing in umbels, and a stinging wolfsbane leaf. 4. Shrubby casavi, without prickles, and smooth leaves, which are less divided. 5. The first sort is cultivated in all the warm parts of America, where the root, after being divested of its milky juice, is ground to flour, and then made into cakes of bread. Of this there are two sorts. The most common has purplish stalks, with the veins and leaves of a purplish colour; but the stalks of the other are green, and the leaves of a lighter green. The last sort is not venomous, even when the roots are fresh and full of juice; which the negroes frequently dig up, roast, and eat, like potatoes, without any ill effects. The casada is propagated by cuttings, about fifteen or sixteen inches long, taken from those plants whose roots are grown to maturity. These cuttings are planted by the Americans in their rainy seasons, a foot or fourteen inches deep in the ground; and the land in which they are placed, must be well wrought. When the cuttings have taken root, they require no farther care than to be kept clear from weeds; and, in about eight or nine months, when grown to maturity, in good ground they will be as large as the calf of a man's leg, but commonly equal to the size of good pastures.

CASAWARE. See CASAWARY.

CASSIA. n. f. A sweet spice mentioned by Moses, Exod. xxx. 24. as an ingredient in the composition of the holy oil, which was to be made use of in the consecration of the sacred vessels of the tabernacle. 'His aromatick is said to be the bark of a tree very like cinnamon, and grows in the Indies without being cultivated.

All thy garments smell of myrrh, aloes, and cassia. Ps. xlv. 8.

CASSIA. n. f. The name of a tree.
 It hath a cylindrical, long, taper, or flat pod, divided into many cells by transverse diaphragms; in each of which is contained one hard seed, lodged, for the most part, in a clammy black substance, which is purgative. The flowers have five leaves, disposed obliquely. The species are nine; 1. The American cassia, or pudding pipe tree, &c. Many of these plants will flower the second year, and some of them will produce ripe seeds with us. The second sort grows to be a very large tree, not only in Alexandria, but also in the West Indies. This is what produces the purging cassia of the shops.

CASSIDONY, or Stickadore. n. f. [Stachos, Latin.] The name of a plant.

CASOWARY. n. f. A large bird of prey in the East Indies. Have a clear idea of the relation of dam and chick, between the two casowaries in St. James's Park.

CASOCK. n. f. [casaque, Fr.] A close garment; now generally that which clergymen wear under their gowns. Half of the which dare not shake the snow from off their casocks, lest they shake themselves to pieces.

His scanty salary compelled him to run deep in debt for a new gown and casock, and now and then forced him to write some paper of wit or humour, or preach a sermon for ten shillings, to supply his necessities.

CASWEED. n. f. A common weed, otherwise called shepherd's pouch.

CASUALNESS. n. f. [from casual.] Accidentals.

CASUALTY. n. f. [from casual.]

1. Accident; a thing happening by chance, not design.

With more patience men endure the losses that befall them by mere casualty, than the damages which they sustain by injustice.

That Octavius Caesar should shift his camp that night that it happened to be took by the enemy, was a mere casualty; yet it preserved a person, who lived to establish a total alteration of government in the imperial city of the world.

2. Chance that produces unnatural death.

Builds in the weather on the outward wall, Ev'n in the force and road of casualty.

It is observed in particular nations, that, within the space of two or three hundred years, notwithstanding all casualties, the number of men doubles.

We find one casualty in our bills, of which, though there be daily talk, there is little effect.

CASUISTRY. n. f. [casuiste, Fr. from casus, Lat.] One that studies and settles cases of conscience.

The judgment of any casuist, or learned divine, concerning the state of a man's soul, is not sufficient to give him confidence.

You can scarce see a bench of porters without two or three casuists in it, that will settle you the rights of princes.

Who shall decide, when doctors disagree, And foundest casuists doubt, like you and me?

CASUISTICAL. adj. [from casuist.] Relating to cases of conscience; containing the doctrine relating to cases.

What arguments they have to beguile poor, simple, unstable souls with, I know not; but surely the practical, casuistical, that is, the principal, vital part of their religion favours very little of spirituality.

CASUISTRY. n. f. [from casuist.] The science of a casuist; the doctrine of cases of conscience.

Concession would not pass for good casuistry in these ages.

Morality, by her false guardians drawn, Chicane in furs, and casuistry in lawn.

CAT. n. f. [catas, Teuton. kat, Fr.] A domestic animal that catches mice, commonly reckoned by naturalists the lowest order of the konite species.

'Twas you incens'd the rabble; Cats, that can judge as fitly of his worth, As I can of those mystiques, which heav'n Will not have earth to know.

Thrice the brindled cat hath mew'd.

A cat, as she beholds the light, draws the ball of her eye small and long, being covered over with a green skin, and dilates it at pleasure.

CAT. n. f. A sort of ship.

CAT in the pan. [imagined by some to be rightly written Catipon, as coming from Catipani, revolted governors. An unknown correspondent imagines, very naturally, that it is corrupted from Cate in the pan.]

There is a cunning which we, in England, call the turning of the cat in the pan; which is, when that which a man says to another, he lays it as if another had said it to him.

CAT o' nine tails. A whip with nine lashes, used for the punishment of crimes.

You dread reformers of an impious age, You awful cat o' nine tails to the flage,

This once be just, and in our cause engage.

CATACHRESIS. n. f. [καταχρησις, abuse.] It is, in rhetoric, the abuse of a trope, when the words are too far wrested from their native signification, or when one word is abusively put for another, for want of the proper word; as, a voice beautiful to the ear.

CATACHRESTICAL. adj. [from catachresis.] Contrary to proper use; forced; far fetched.

A cataphrasis and far derived similitude it holds with men, that is, in a bifurcation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
CATAclysm. n. f. [κατάκλυσμος.] A deluge; an inundation; used generally for the universal deluge.

The opinion that held these cataphys and empyrotes universal, was such, as held, that it put a total conformation into things in this lower world. Hæ.

CATAcombs. n. f. [from κατά and κομῆ, a hollow or cavity.] Subterraneous cavities for the burial of the dead; of which there are a great number about three miles from Rome, supposed to be the caves and cells where the primitive christians hid and assembled themselves, and where they interred the martyrs, which are accordingly visited with devotion. But, anciently, the word catombs was only understood of the tombs of St. Peter and St. Paul; and the Cato Monro, in the Philosophy of Translations, supposes the catombs to have been originally the sepulchres of the first Romans. Places like these might afford convenient resorts to the primitive christians, but could never be built by them. Chambers.

CATAGMA'TICK. adj. [κατάγμα, a fracture.] That which has the quality of consolidating the parts.

I put on a catamantic emplaster, and, by the use of a laced glove, feathered the pitted swelling, and strengthened it.

CATARACT. n. f. [κατάρακτης.] A fall of water from on high; a shoot of water; a cataract.

Flow, winds, and crack your cheeks; rage, blow!
 You cataracts and hurricanes, spout,
 Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the cocks. Shakespeare. King Lear.

What if all
 Her forces were open'd, and this firmament
 Of hell should spout her cataracts of fire?
 Impendent horrors! Milton.

No sooner he, with them of man and beast
 Select for life, shall in the ark be lodg'd,
 And shelter'd round; but all the cataracts
 Of heav'n's oft open, on the earth shall pour Rain, day and night. Milton.

Torrents and loud impetuous cataracts,
 Through roads abrupt, and rude unshallow'd tracts,
 Run down the lofty mountain's channel'd sides,
 And to the vale convey their foaming tides. Blackmore.

CATARACT. [In medicine.] A suffusion of the eye, when little clouds, moles, and flies, seem to float about in the air; when, confirmed, the pupil of the eye is either wholly, or in part, covered, and shut up with a little thin skin, so that the light has no admittance. Quincy.

Saladine hath a yellow milk, which bath likewise much aci-mony; for it cleanseth the eyes: it is good also for catarrhs. Bute's N. teral History.

CATARRH. n. f. [κατάρρη, deflux.] A defluxion of a sharp serum from the glands about the head and throat, generally occasioned by a diminution of insensible perspiration, or cold, wherein what should pass by the skin, oozes out upon those glands, and occasions irritations. The causes are, whatever occasions too great a quantity of serum in the body; whatsoever hinders the discharge by urine, and the pores of the skin. Quincy.

All fev'rous kinds,
 Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs.
 Neither was the body then subject to die by piecemeal, and languish under coughs, catarrhs, or consumptions. South.

10. To please; to seize the affections; to charm.

For I am young, a novice in the trade,
 The fool of love, unpractis'd to persuade,
 And want the soothing arts that catch the fair,
 But, caught myself, lie struggling in the snare. Dryden.

I've persud' her well;
 Beauty and honour in her are so mingled,
 That they have caught the king. Shakespeare.

11. To receive any contagion or disease.

I cannot name the disease, and it is caught
 Of you that yet are well. Shakespeare.

Which we disdain should tetter us, yet seek
 The very way to catch them. Shakespeare.

In sooth I know not why I am so sad :
It wearies me ; you say it wearies you ;
But how I caught it, found it, or came by it,
I am to learn. Shakespeare.
The softest of our British ladies expose their necks and arms to the open air, which the men could not do, without catching cold, for want of being accustomed to it. Addison.
Or call the winds through long acadies to roar,
Proud to catch cold at a Venetian door, Pope.
12. To catch at. To endeavour suddenly to lay hold on.

In flaming flames, and catches on his friends. Dryden.
Does the feditious catch from man to man,
And run among the ranks ? Addison.

CATCH, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Seizure ; the act of seizing any thing that flies, or hides.
And surely taught by his open eye,
His eye, that ev'n did mark her trodden grass,
'Tis that would fain the catch of Srephon fly. Sidney.

2. The act of taking quickly from another.
Several quires, placed one over against another, and taking the voice by catches anthem-wise, give great pleasure. Bacon.
3. A long fun in succession, where one catches it from another.
This is the tune of our catch plaid by the picture of nobody. Shakespeare. Tempest.

Far be from thence the glutton parasite,
Singing his drunken catches all the night. Dryden j. n.
The meat was ferv'd, the bowls were crown'd,
Catches were sung, and healths went round. Prior.

4. Watch ; the posture of feizing.
Both of them lay upon the catch for a great action ; it is no wonder therefore, that they were often engaged on one subject. Addison.

5. An advantage taken ; hold laid on.
All which notions are but ignorant catches of a few things, which are most obvious to men's observations. Bacon.
The motion is but a catch of the wit upon a few instances ;
as the manner is in the philosophy received. Bacon.

Fate of empires, and the fall of kings,
Should turn on flying hours, and catch of moments. Dryden.

campan ; which fee.

CATCHPOLE, n. f. [from catch and poll.] A serjeant ; a bumballif.

Though now it be used as a word of contempt, yet, in ancient times, it seems to have been used without reproach, for such as we now call serjeants of the mace, or any other that uses to arrest men upon any cause. Covel.
They call all temporal busineses under the officiousness, as if they were but matters for underofficers and catchpols ; though many times those underofficers do more good than their high speculations. Bacon.

Another monster,
Sullen of aspect, by the vulgar call'd
A catchpoll, whose polluted hands the gods,
With force incredible and magic charms,
Ere have endu'd, if he his ample palms
Should haply on ill-lasted shoulder lay
Of debitor. Philips.

1. A word, n. f. [from catch and word.] With printers.
The word at the corner of the page under the last, which is repeated at the top of the next page.

CATECHETICAL, adj. [from κατεχέω.] Consisting of questions and answers.

Socrates introduced a catechetical method of arguing ; he would ask his adversary question upon question, till he convinced him out of his own mouth, that his opinions were wrong. Addison.

CATECHETICALLY, adv. [from catechetical.] In the way of question and answer.

TO CATECHISE, v. a. [κατεχέω.]
1. To instruct by asking questions, and correcting the answers.
I will catechise the world for him ; that is, make questions, and bid them answer. Shakespeare.

Had those three thousand souls been catechised by our modern caluists, we had seen a wide difference. Deacy of Priety.

2. To question ; to interrogate ; to examine ; to try by interrogatories.
Why then I suck my teeth, and catechise
My piked man of countries. Shakespeare.

There lies about a strange report,
Of some express arriv'd at court ;
I'm stopp'd by all the fools I meet,
And catechis'd in ev'ry street. Swift.

CATECHISER, n. f. [from catechise.] One who catechizes.
CATECHISM, n. f. [from κατεχέω.] A form of instruction by means of questions and answers, concerning religion.

Ways of teaching there have been sundry always usual in God's church, for the first introduction of youth to the knowledge of God ; the Jews even till this day have their catechisms.
Hoster.

He had no catechism, but the creation, needed no study but reflection, and read no book but the volume of the world. South.

CATECHIST, n. f. [κατεχέω.] One whose charge is to instruct by questions, or to question the uninstructed concerning religion.

None of years and knowledge was admitted, who had not

Harris.

CATHARTICAL. adj. [καθαρτικόν, Gr.] Purging medicines. The CATHARTICK. } vermicular or peristaltic motion of the guts continually helps on their contents, from the pylorus to the rectum; and every irritation either quickens that motion in its natural order, or occasions some little inversions in it. In both what but slightly adheres to the coats will be loosened, and they will be more agitated, and thus rendered more fluid. By this only it is manifest, how cathartic halves and increases the discharges by stool; but where the force of the stimulus is great, all the appendages of the bowels, and all the viscera in the abdomen, will be twitched; by which a great deal will be drained back into the intestines, and made a part of what they discharge.

Quincy.

Quicksilver precipitated either with gold, or without addition, into a powder, is wont to be strongly enough cathartical, though the chymists have not yet proved, that either gold or mercury hath any salt at all, much less any that is purgative.

Boyle's Septimal Chymistry.

Lustrations and catharticks of the mind were fought for, and all endeavour used to calm and regulate the fury of the passions.

Dancy of Piety.

The piercing caustics ply their spiteful pow'r,

I act the causif of these timeless deaths,
As blamful as the executioner? Shakespeare.
CAUSIF, n. f. [causif, Fr. This word, by a false notion of CAUSIF, its etymology, has been lately written causif.]
A way raised and paved; a way raised above the rest of the ground.

To Shippin the lot came forth westward by the causif.
Chronicler.

Th' other way Satan went down,
The causif to hell-gate. Paradise Lost.

But that broad causif will direct your way,
And you may reach the town by noon of day. Dryden.
Whole causif parts the vale with shady rows;
Whole seats the weary traveller repose. Pope.

CAUSIFICAL, adj. [causifical.] Medicaments which, by their CAUSIFICAL, violent activity and heat, destroy the texture of the part to which they are applied, and eat it away, or burn it into an eschar, which they do by the extreme nitrogen, saltpetre, and quantity of motion, that, like those of fire itself, destroy the texture of the solids themselves, and change what they are applied to, into a substance like burnt flesh; which, in a little time, with detergent dressing, falls quite off, and leaves a vacancy in the part. Quincy.
If extrusion be safe, the best way will be by causifical medicines or escharotics. Wifeman.

I proposed eradicating by escharotics, and began with a causif acid stone. Wifeman.

Air too hot, cold and moist, abounding perhaps with causif, nitrogen, saltpetre, and coagulating particles. Arbuthnot.

CAUSIFICAL, n. f. A causifical or burning application.
It was a tenderness to mankind, that introduced corrosives and causifical, which are indeed but artificial fires. Temple.

The piercing causifical ply their spiteful pow'r, Emetics rancid, and keen cathartics scour. Garrick.
CAUSIFICAL, n. f. [causifical, Lat.] Caution; scruple; a word distinct.

Perhaps he loves you now;
And now no foil of causifical doth belincher
The virtue of his will. Shakespeare.

CAUSIFICAL, adj. [causifical, Fr.]
1. Cautious; wary; provident.

Fall's doth will, like a causifical artisan, that the inward might bear some good share in the burden. Wotton.

2. Wily; cunning; treacherous.
Of themselves, for the most part, they are so causifical and with head, especially being men of so small experience and prudence in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilties and fly shifts. Spenser.

Your son
Will or exceed the common, or be caught
With causifical bars and practice. Shakespeare.

CAUSIFICAL, adv. [from causifical.] Cunningly; slyly; treacherously; cautiously; warily.

The Jews, not unwisely resolved of the sciatica side of Jacob, do causifical, in their diet, abstain from both.

All pretorian courts, if any of the parties be laid asleep, under pretence of a retirement, and the other party doth causifical get the start and advantage, yet they will set back all things in status quo prius. Bacon.

CAUSIFICALIZATION, n. f. [from causificalize.] The act of burning flesh with hot irons, or caustic medicaments.

They require, after causificalization, no such bandage, as that thouly you need to fear interception of the spirits. Wifeman.

CAUSIFICALIZE, v. a. [causificalize, Fr.] To burn with the cau-tery.

For each true word a blither, and each false,
Be causificalizing to the root of th' tongue,
Continuing it with speaking. Shakespeare.

No marvel though cantharides have such corrosive and causifical quality; for there is not one other of the insects, that is bred of a duller matter. Bacon.

The design of the cautery is to prevent the canal from closing; but the operators confess, that in persons causificalized, the tears trickle down ever after. Sharp.

CAUSIFICALITY, n. f. [causifical, Fr.]
Cautery is either actual or potential; the first is burning by a hot iron, and the latter with caustic medicines. The actual causificality is generally used to stop mortification, by burning the N. XXII.

Dead parts to the quick; or to stop the effusion of blood, by searing up the vessels.

In heat of fight it will be necessary to have your actual cau-tery always ready; for that will secure the bleeding arteries in a moment. Wifeman.

CAUTION, n. f. [caution, Fr. cautio, Lat.]
1. Prudence, as it respects danger; foresight; provident care; wariness.

2. Security for.
Such conditions, and cautions of the condition, as might assure the people with as much assurance as worldly matter: bear.

The Cedar, upon this new acquiescence, gave him part of Baccharia for caution for his disbursements. Quincy.

The parliament would yet give his majesty sufficient caution that the war should be prosecuted. Hovel.

He that objects any crime, ought to give caution by the means of sureties, that he will periculate in the prosecution of such crimes. Clarke.

3. Provision or security against; direction. Ayliffe.
In despite of all the rules and cautions of government, the most dangerous and mortal of vices will come off. L'Estrange.

4. Provisionary precept.
Attention to the forementioned symptoms affords the best cautions and rules of diet, by way of prevention. Arbuthnot.

5. Warning.
CAUTION, v. a. [from the noun.] To warn; to give notice of a danger.

How shall our thought avoid the various snare?
Or wisdom to our caution'd soul declare
The different shapes thou pleasest to employ,
When bent to hurt, and certain to destroy? Prior.

You caution'd me against their charms,
But never gave me equal arms;
Your lessons found the weakest part,
Aim'd at the head, but reach'd the heart.

CAUTIONARY, adj. [from caution.] Given as a pledge, or in security. Swift.

I am made the cautionary pledge,
The gage and hostage of your keeping it. Southern.

Is there no security for the island of Britain? Has the enemy no cautionary towns and sea-ports, to give us for securing trade? Swift.

CAUTIOUS, adj. [from cautus, Lat.] Wary; watchful.
Be cautious of him; for he is sometimes an inconstant lover, because he hath a great advantage. Swift.

CAUTIOUSLY, adv. [from cautus.] In an attentive, wary manner.

They know how fickle common lovers are:
Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;
For few there are but have been once deceiv'd. Dryden.

CAUTIOUSNESS, n. f. [from cautus.] Watchfulness; vigilance; circumspection; provident care; prudence with respect to danger. Swift.

I could not but approve the generous constancy and cautiousness.
K. Charles.

We should always act with great cautiousness and circumspection, in points where it is not impossible that we may be deceived. Addison.

TO CAW, v. n. [taken from the sound.] To cry as the rook, raven, or crow.

Ruffet-pated choughs, many in sort,
Rising and cawing at the gun's report. Shakespeare.

There is a walk of aged elms, so very high, that the rooks and crows upon the tops seem to be cawing in another region.
Addison, Spectator.

The rook, who high amid the boughs
In early springs, his airy city builds,
And caelestials caw. Thomson.

CAWMAN, n. f. The American name for the alligator or crocodile.

TO CEASE, v. n. [cesser, Fr. cessare, Lat.]
1. To leave off; to stop; to give over; to desist.

The lives of all, who cease from combat, spare;
My brother's be your most peculiar care. Dryden.

2. To fail; to be extinct.
The poor man shall never cease out of the land. Deuteronomy.

The soul being removed, the faculties and operations of life, sense and intellect cease from that causa prima, and are no longer in it. Hale.

3. To be at an end.
But now the wonder ceases, since I see
She kept them only, Tityrus, for thee. Dryden.

4. To rest.
The ministers of Christ have ceased from their labours. Spratt.

TO CEASE, v. a. To put a stop to; to put an end to.
Haste you to lord Timon;
Importune him for monies; be not ceas'd
With slight denial. Shakespeare.

You may sooner, by imagination, quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower,
than

than to make him stand still.

Craze then this impious rage.

But he, her fears to craze,

Sent down the meek-eyed peace.

The discord is complet, nor can they craze

The dire debate, nor yet command the peace.

CRAZE. n. f. [from the verb.] Extinction; failure.

The craze of majesty

Dies not alone, but, like a gulph, withdraws

What's near it, with it.

CRASELESS. adj. [from crase.] Incessant; perpetual; continual;

without pause; without stop; without end.

My guiltless blood must quench the craseless fire,

On which my endless tears were bootless spent.

All thes, with craseless praise, his works behold,

Both day and night.

Like an oak

That stands secure, though all the winds employ

Their craseless roar, and only sheds its leaves,

Or masts, which the revolving spring restores.

CECITY. n. f. [cecitatis, Lat.] Blindness; privation of sight.

They are not blind, nor yet distinctly see; there is in them

no cecity, yet more than a cecuteny; they have sight enough to discern the light, though not perhaps to distinguish objects or colours.

CECUTENY. n. f. [cecutis, Lat.] Tendency to blindness;

cloudiness of sight.

There is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecuteny.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CEDAR. n. f. [cedrus, Lat.] A tree.

It is evergreen; the leaves are much narrower than those of the pine-tree, and many of them produced out of one tubercle, resembling a painter's pencil; it hath male flowers, or katkins, produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree.

The seeds are produced in large cones, squamose and turbinated.

The extension of the branches is very regular in cedar trees; the ends of the shoots declining, and thereby shewing their upper surface, which is constantly clothed with green leaves, so regularly as to appear as a distance like a green carpet, and, in waving about, make an agreeable prospect. It is surprising that this tree has not been more cultivated in England; for it would be a great ornament to barren bleak mountains, even in Scotland, where few other trees, would grow; it being a native of Mount Libanus, where the snow continues most part of the year. What we find in Scripture, of the lofty cedars, is no ways applicable to the stature of this tree; for we find by those now growing in England, and by the testimony of travellers, that have seen those few remaining trees on Mount

Libanus, they are not inclined to grow very lofty, but extend their branches very far; to which the allusion, made by the Psalmist, agrees very well, when, describing the flourishing state of a people, he says, they shall spread their branches like the cedar tree. Maundrell, in his Travels, says, he measured one of the largest cedars on Mount Libanus, and found it to be twelve yards six inches in circumference, and found, and thirty seven yards in the spread of its boughs. At about five or six yards from the ground, it was divided into five limbs, each of which was equal to a great tree. The wood of this famous tree is accounted proof against the putrefaction of animal bodies. The law dust is thought to be one of the secrets used by the mountain-banks, who pretend to have the embalming mystery. This wood is also said to yield an oil, which is famous for preserving books and writings, and the wood is thought by my lord Bacon to continue above a thousand years found. It is also recorded, that, in the temple of Apollo, at Utica, there was found timber of near two thousand years old; and the statue of the goddess, in the famous Epseian temple, was said to be of this material, as was also the timber work of that glorious structure.

This sort of timber is very dry, and subject to split; nor does it well endure to be fastened with nails; therefore pins of the same wood are much preferable.

I must yield my body to the earth:

Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,

Whole arms gave shelter to the princely eagle;

Under whose shade the ramping lion slept,

Whole top branch overpeep'd Jove's spreading tree,

And kept low shrubs from winter's pow'ful wind.

Shakep. Henry VI.

CE'DRINE. adj. [cedrinus, Lat.] Of or belonging to the cedar tree.

TO CELL. v. a. [celo, Lat.] To overlay, or cover the inner roof of a building.

And the greater house he celled with fir-tree, which he overlaid with fine gold.

How will he, from his house celled with cedar, be content with his Saviour's lot, not to have where to lay his head?

Deacy of Piety.

CEILING. n. f. [from celi.] The inner roof.

Varnish makes ceilings not only shine but last.

And now the thickened fly

Like a dark ceiling stood; down rust'd the rain

Impetuous.

Brown.

Paradise Lost.

Milton.

Dryden.

So when the sun by day, or moon by night,
Snake out the polish'd buds their trembling light,
The glitt'ring species here and there divide,
And cast their dubious beams from side to side:
Now on the walls, now on the pavement play,
And to the ceiling flath the glazing day.

Dryden.

CE'LANDINE. [gerani] [chelandium, Lat.] A plant.

The cup of the flower consists of two leaves, which soon fall away; the flower has four leaves, that are expanded in form of a cross. It grows wild, and is used in medicine.

CE'LANDINE, (the lesser, or Picquart), [chelandium minus, Lat.]

It hath a gramose, or gramose root; the leaves are round-ish; the flower stalks trail upon the ground; the cup of the flower consists of three leaves.

CE'LATURE. n. f. [calatura, Lat.] The art of engraving or cutting in metals.

TO CELEBRATE. v. a. [celebrare, Lat.]

1. To praise; to commend; to give praise to; to make famous,

The songs of Zion were psalms and pieces of poetry, that adored or celebrated the Supreme Being.

I would have him read over the celebrated works of antiquity, which have flood the test of so many different ages.

2. To distinguish by solemn rites; to perform solemnly.

He flew all them that were gone to celebrate the sabbath.

2 Alcuin.

On the feast day, the father cometh forth, after divine services, into a large room, where the feast is celebrated. Bacon.

3. To mention in a set or solemn manner, whether of joy or sorrow.

This pause of pow'r, 'tis Ireland's hour to mourn;

While England celebrates your safe return.

CELEBRATION. n. f. [from celebrate.] A

1. Solemn performance; solemn remembrance.

He laboured to drive sorrow from her, and to hasten the ce- lebration of their marriage.

He shall conceal it,

While you are willing it shall come to note;

What time we will our celebration keep,

According to my birth.

During the celebration of this holy sacrament, you attend not to what is done by the priest.

2. Praise; renown; memorial.

No more shall be added in this place, his memory deserving a particular celebration, than that his learning, piety and virtue, have been attained by few.

Some of the ancients may be thought sometimes to have added a less number of letters, by the celebration of those who have added to their alphabet.

CELEBRIOUS. adj. [celeber, Lat.] Famous; renowned; noted.

The Jews, Jerusalem, and the Temple, having been always so celebrious; yet when, after their captivity, they were despoiled of their glory, even then, the Assyrians, Greeks, and Romans, honoured, with sacrifices, the most high God, whom that nation worshipped.

CELEBRIOUSLY. adv. [from celebrious.] In a famous manner.

CELEBRIOUSNESS. n. f. [from celebrious.] Renown; fame.

CELEBRITY. n. f. [celebritas, Lat.] Celebration; fame.

The manner of her receiving, and the celebrity of the marriage, were performed with great magnificence.

CELEBRICK. n. f. A species of parakey; it is also called tor- mented ulery.

CELEBRITY. n. f. [celebritas, Lat.] Swiftness; speed; velocity.

We very well see in them, who thus plead, a wonderful celerity of discourse; for, perceiving at the first but only some of suspicion, and fear lest it should be evil, they are present;

in one and the same brief breath, resolved, that what beginning soever it had, there is no possibility it should be good.

His former custom and practice was ever full of formalities and celerity, to make head against them.

Thus, with imagin'd wings, our swift scene flies,

In motion with no less celerity

Than that of thought.

Three things concur to make a percussion great; the body,

the density, and the celerity of the body moved.

Whatever encreaseth the density of the blood, even without encreaseth its celerity, heats, because a denser body is hotter than a rarer.

CE'LEBY. n. f. A species of parakey; which see.

CELESTIAL. adj. [caelestis, Lat.]

1. Heavenly; relating to the superlunary regions.

There fly, until the twelve celestial signs

Have brought about their annual reckoning.

The ancients commonly applied celestial descriptions of good climes to their own.

2. Heavenly; relating to the blessed fate.

Play that full note

I nam'd my knell; whilst I sit meditating

On that celestial harmony I go to.

3. Heavenly, with respect to excellency.

Canst thou pretend desire, whom zeal inflam'd

To worship, and a pow'r celestial nam'd?

2 Dryden

Telemachus

Telenachus, his bloomy face

Chewing cellular faces, with godlike grace. Pope.
CELLISTIAL. n. f. [from the adj.] An inhabitant of heaven.

This stable and mild, the prince precedes,
 And to the dome th' unknown cellistial leads. Pope.
CELLISTIALITY. adv. [from cellistial, Lat.] In a heavenly manner.
TO CELLISTIFY. v. a. [from cellistial, Lat.] To give something of heavenly nature to any thing.

We should affirm, that all things were in all things, that heaven were but earth terrestrial, and earth but heaven cellistial, or that each part above had influence upon its affinity below. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CELLIACK. adj. [celiaca, the belly.] Relating to the lower belly.
 The blood moving slowly through the celliack and mesenterick arteries, produces complaints. Arbushot.

CELLIBACY. n. f. [from celibis, Latin.] Single life; unmarried state.

I can attribute their numbers to nothing but their frequent marriages; for they look on celibacy as an accursed state, and generally are married before twenty. Spectator.

By teaching them how to carry themselves in their relations of husbands and wives, parents and children, they have, without question, adorned the gospel, glorified God, and benefited man, much more than they could have done in the devoutest and strictest celibacy. Atterbury.

CELLIPATE. n. f. [cellipatus, Lat.] Single life.
 Where polygamy is forbidden, the males oblige themselves to cellipate, and then multiplication is hindered. Graunt.

CELL. n. f. [cella, Lat.]

1. A small cavity or hollow place.
 The brain contains ten thousand cells,
 In each some active faculty dwells.

How these for ever, though a monarch reign,
 Their separate cells and properties maintain. Pope.

2. The cave or little habitation of a religious person.
 Besides, she did intend confession.

At Patrick's cell this even; and there she was not. Shakspeare.

Then did religion in a lazy cell,
 Inempty, airy contemplations dwell. Denham.

3. A small and close apartment in a prison.
 Any small place of residence.

Mine eyes he clos'd, but open left the cell
 Of fancy, my internal fight. Paradise Lost.

5. Little bags or bladders, where fluids, or matter of different sorts are lodged; common both to animal and plants. Quincy.

CELLAR. n. f. [cella, Lat.] A place under ground, where stores are deposited.

If this fellow had lived in the time of Cato, he would, for his punishment, have been confined to the bottom of a cellar during his life. Peacock on Drawing.

CELLARAGE. n. f. [from cellar.] The part of the building which makes the cellars.

Come on, you hear this fellow in the cellarage. Shakspeare.

Take care also, that it be well watered and wooded; that it have good ascent to it, which makes a house wholesome, and gives opportunity for cellarage. Mervin's Husbandry.

CELLARIST. n. f. [cellarius, Lat.] The butler in a religious house. Dict.

CELLULAR. adj. [cellula, Lat.] Consisting of little cells or cavities.

The urine, insinuating itself amongst the neighbouring muscles, and cellular membranes, destroyed four. Sharp's Surgery.

CELSITUDE. n. f. [celsum, Lat.] Height. Dict.

CEMENT. n. f. [cementum, Lat.]

1. The matter with which two bodies are made to cohere; as, mortar or glue.

Your temples burned in their cement, and your franchises confined into an augur's bore. Shakspeare.

There is a cement compounded of flour, whites of eggs, and bones powdered, that becometh hard as marble. Bacon.

You may see divers pebbles, and a crust of cement or stone between them, as hard as the pebbles themselves. Bacon.

The foundation was made of rough stone, joined together with a moist firm cement; upon this was laid another layer, consisting of small stones and cement. Arbushot.

2. Bond of union in friendship.

Let not the piece of virtue which is set
 Between us, as the cement of our love,

To keep it builded, be the cause to batter.

What cement should unite heaven and earth, light and darkness? Shakspeare, Antony and Cleopatra.

Look over the whole creation, and you shall see, that the bond or cement, that holds together all the parts of this great and glorious fabric, is gratitude. South.

TO CEMENT. v. a. [from the noun.] To unite by means of something interposed.

But how the fear of us
 May cement their divisions, and bind up

The petty difference, we yet not know. Shakspeare.

Liquid bodies have nothing to cement them; they are all loose and incoherent, and in a perpetual flux; even an heap of sand, or fine powder, will suffer no hollownefs within them, though they be dry substances. Burnet.

Cemented all the long contending powers. Philips.

Leave with white lead cemens his wings;
 White lead was sent us to repair

Two brightest, brittlest earthly things,
 A lady's face, and china ware. Swift.

TO CEMENT. v. n. To come into conjunction; to cohere.

When a wound is recent, and the parts of it are divided by a sharp instrument, they will, if held in close contact for some time, reunite by inoculation, and cemens like one branch of a tree ingrafted on another. Sharp's Surgery.

CEMENTATION. n. f. [from cement.] The act of cementing, or uniting with cement.

CEMETERY. n. f. [cemeterium.] A place where the dead are reposited.

The souls of the dead appear frequently in cemeteries, and hover about the places where their bodies are buried, as still hankering about their old brutal pleasures, and desiring again to enter the body.

CEN, and CIN, denote kink; so Cinoph is a key to his kindred; Cinobolus, a protector of his kinsfolk; Cinberg, the defence of his kindred; Cinris, powerful in kindred.

CENATORY. adj. [from cens, to sup, Lat.] Relating to supper.

The Romans washed, were anointed, and wore a cenatory
 garment; and the same was practised by the Jews.

CENOBIAL. adj. [cenobium and gignis.] Living in community.

They have multitudes of religious orders, black and gray, eremitical and cenobial, and nuns. Stillingfleet.

CENOTAPH. n. f. [cenotaphos and laos.] A monument for one buried elsewhere.

Priam, to whom the story was unknown,
 As dead, deplor'd his metamorphos'd son;

A cenotaph his name and title kept,
 And Hector round the tomb with all his brothers wept.

The Athenians, when they lost any men at sea, raised a cen- otaph, or empty monument. Dryden's Fables.

CENSE. n. f. [cens us, Lat.] Publick rates.

We see what floods of treasure have flowed into Europe by that action; so that the cense, or rates of Christendom, are raised five ten times, yet twenty times told. Bacon.

TO CENSE. v. a. [censere, Fr.] To perfume with odours.

The Saffron, and cense his altars round
 With Saban smoke, their heads with poplar bound.

Grincus was near, and cast a furious look
 On the side-altar, cens'd with sacred smoke

And bright with flaming fires. Dryden.

CENSEUR. n. f. [censurer, Fr.] The pan or vessel in which incense is burned.

Here's snip, and nip, and cut, and flish, and flush,
 Like to a censer in a barber's shop.

Antonus gave piety in his money, like a lady with a censer, before an altar. Shakspeare, Tuning of the Shrew.

Of incense clouds
 Fuming from golden cenfers hid the mount. Milton.

CENSOR. n. f. [censor, Lat.]

1. An officer of Rome, who had the power of correcting manners.

2. One who is given to censure and exprobration.

I'll natur'd censors of the present age,
 And fond of all the follies of the past.

The most severe censor cannot but be pleased with the prodigality of his wit, though, at the same time, he could have wished, that the master of it had been a better manager. Dryden.

CENSORIAL. adj. [from censor.] Relating to the censor.

As the chancery had the pretorian power for equity, so the star-chamber had the censorial power for offences under the degree of capital. Bacon.

CENSORIOUS. adj. [from censor.]

1. Addicted to censure; severe; full of invectives.

Do not too many believe no religion to be pure, but what is intemperately rigid? no zeal to be spiritual, but what is cen- sorious, or vindictive? Spratt.

O! let my preference make my travels light,
 And potent Venus shall exalt my name

Above the rumours of censorious fame. Prior.

2. Sometimes it has of before the object of reproach.

A dogmatical spirit inclines a man to be censorious to his neighbours. Harris.

3. Sometimes en.

He treated all his inferiors of the clergy with a most fancied pride; was rigorously and universally censorious upon all his brethren of the gown. Swift.

CENSORIOUSLY. adv. [from censorious.] In a severe reflecting manner.

CENSORIOUSNESS. n. f. [from censorious.] Disposition to reproach; habit of reprehending.

Sournefs of difpofition, and rudeneffs of behaviour, cenforiousnefs and finifter interpretation of things, all crofs and diftaffful humours, render the converfation of men grievous and uneafy to one another.

CENFORSHIP. n. f. [from cenfor.] Tillotfon.

1. The office of a cenfor.

2. The time in which the office of cenfor is born.

It was brought to Rome in the cenforfhip of Claudius. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CENSURABLE. adj. [from cenfure.] Worthy of cenfure; blameable; culpable.

A fmall miftake may leave upon the mind the lafting memory of having been taunted for fomething, enurable. Lacke.

CENSURABLENESS. n. f. [from cenfurable.] Blamablenefs; liable to be cenfured.

CENSURE. n. f. [cenfura, Latin.]

1. Blame; reprimand; reproach.

Enough for half the greateft of thefe days,

To fcape my cenfure, not expect my praife. Pope.

2. Judgement; opinion.

Maflans, and you, my fifter, will you go

CHAIR. n. f. [chair, Fr.]

1. A moveable seat.

Whether thou choos't Cervantes' ferocious air,
Or laugh and flake in Rabelais' easy chair,

Or praise the court, or magnify mankind,
Or thy griev'd country's copper chains unbind.

Pope.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person, without a back.

Watts's Logic.

2. A seat of justice, or of authority.

He makes for England, here to claim the crown.—
Is the chair empty? Is the sword unsway'd?

Is the king dead?

Shakespeare. Richard III.

If thou be that princely eagle's bird,
Show thy descent by gazing gainst the sun;

For chair and dukedom, throne and kingdom, say;
Either that's thine, or else thou wert not his.

Shakespeare. Henry VI.

The honour'd gods
Keep Rome in safety, and the chair of justice

Supply with worthy men.

Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

The committee of the commons appointed Mr. Pym to take the chair.

Though only twelve are sworn, yet twenty four are to be returned, to supply the defects or want of appearance of those that are challenged off, or make default. Hale.
5. To claim as due.
The utter disturbance of that divine order, whereby the pre-eminence of chiefest acceptation is by the best things worthily challenged. Hester.
Which of you, shall we say, doth love us most?
That we our largest bounty may extend,
Where nature doth with merit challenge. Shaksfp.
And so much duty as my mother shew'd
To you, preferring you before her father;
So much I challenge, that I may profess
Due to the moor, my lord. Shaksfp. Othello.
Had you not been his father, these white flakes
Did challenge pity of them. Shaksfp.
So when a tiger sucks the bullocks blood,
A famish'd lion, issuing from the wood,
Roars loudly fierce, and challenges the food. Dryden's Fables.

very well in many sentiments. Spectator.

CHAMBERLAIN, n. f. [from chamber.]

1. Lord great chamberlain of England is the sixth officer of the crown; a considerable part of his function is at a coronation;

to him belongs the provision of every thing in the house of lords; he disposes of the sword of state; under him are the gentleman usher of the black rod, yeomen ushers, and door-keepers. To this office the duke of Ancaster makes an hereditary claim. Chambers.

2. Lord chamberlain of the household has the oversight of all officers belonging to the king's chambers, except the precinct of the bedchamber. Chambers.

Humbly complaining to her deity,

Got my lord chamberlain his liberty. Shakspeare.

He was made lord reward, that the staff of chamberlain might be put into the hands of his brother. Clarendon.

A patriot is a fool in every age,

Whom all lord chamberlains allow the stage. Pope.

3. A servant who has the care of the chambers.

Think thou,

That the black air, thy boisterous chamberlain,

Will put thy throat on warm? Shakspeare.

When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains

We will with wine and wassail convince. Shakspeare.

He serv'd at first Emilia's chamberlain. Dryden.

a chamberlain.

CHAMBERMAID, n. f. [from chamber and maid.] A maid whose business is to dress a lady, and wait in a chamber.

Men will not hiss,

The chambermaid was named Ciss. Ren. Johnson.

Some coarse country wench, almost decay'd,

Trudges to town, and full turns chambermaid. Pope.

When he doubted whether a word were intelligible or no,

he used to consult one of his lady's chambermaids. Swift.

If these rudies ever presume to entertain the girls with the common follies practis'd by chambermaids among us, they are publicly whipped. Swift.

CHAMBLET, v. a. [from camelot. See CAMELOT.] To vary; to variegate.

Some have the veins more varied and chamblet; as oak, whereof waincot is made. Bacon.

CHAMBLE of a Horse. The joint or bending of the upper part of the hinder leg. Farrist's Diet.

CHAMLEON, n. f. [Chamaeleon.]

The chameleon has four feet, and on each foot three claws.

Its tail is long; with this, as well as with its feet, it fastens itself to the branches of trees. Its tail is flat, its nose long, and made in an obtuse point; its back is sharp, its skin plaited, and jagged like a saw from the neck to the last joint of the tail, and upon its head it has something like a comb; like a fish, it has no neck. Some have asserted, that it lives only upon air; but it has been observed to feed on flies, caught with its tongue, which is about ten inches long, and three thick;

made of white flesh, round, but flat at the end; or hollow and open, resembling an elephant's trunk. It also shrinks,

N XXIII.

and grows longer. This animal is said to assume the colour of those things to which it is applied; but our modern observers assure us, that its natural colour, when at rest and in the shade, is a bluish grey; though some are yellow, and others green, but both of a smaller kind. When it is exposed to the sun, the grey changes into a darker grey, inclining to a dun colour, and its parts, which have least of the light upon them, are changed into spots of different colours. The grain of its skin, when the light doth not shine upon it, is like cloth mixed with many colours. Sometimes when it is handled, it seems to be speckled with dark spots, inclining to green. If it be put upon a black hat, it appears to be of a violet colour;
and sometimes if it be wrapped up in linen, when it is taken off, it is white; but it changes colour only in some parts of the body. Calm.

A chameleon is a creature about the bigness of an ordinary lizard; his head unproportionably big, and his eyes great; he moveth his head without writhing of his neck, which is inflexible, as a hog doth; his back crooked, his skin spotted with little tumours, less eminent nearer the belly; his tail slender and long; on each foot he hath five fingers, three on the outside, and two on the inside; his tongue of a marvellous length in respect of his body, and hollow at the end, which he will launch out to prey upon flies; of colour green, and of a dusky yellow, brighter and whiter towards the belly; yet spotted with blue, white, and red. Bacon.

I can add colours ev'n to the chameleon;

Change shapes with Proteus, for advantage. Shakspeare.

One part devoirs the other, and leaves not so much as a mouthful of that popular air, which the chameleon grasp after.

Livy of Puty.

The thin chameleon, fed with air, receives the colour of the thing to which he cleaves. Dryden.

CHAMFER, v. a. [chanfrer, Fr.] To channel; to make furrows or gutters upon a column.

CHAMFER, n. f. [from to chamfer.] A small furrow or gutter on a column.

CHAMLET, n. f. [See CAMELOT.]

To make a chamlet draw five lines, waved overthwart, if your diapering consist of a double line. Pea Lam.

CHAMOTS, n. f. [chamots, Fr.] An animal of the goat kind, whose skin is made into soft leather, called among us summi.

These are the beasts which you shall eat; the ox, the sheep,

and wild ox, and the chamot. Deuteronomy.

CHAMOMILE, n. f. [chamaemelon.] The name of an odoriferous plant.

It hath a fibrose root; the cup of the flower is squamose, which expands, and appears like many leaves; the flowers are radicated; the petals of the flower are white, and the dish yellow; the leaves are cut into five segments. This plant was formerly in great request for making green walks, and is still cultivated in physick gardens for medicinal use, though it grows wild in great plenty. Müller.

Cool violets, and opine growing still,

Embrathed balm, and chearful galingale,

Fresh coltsfoot, and breathful cham-mil,

Dull poppy, and drink quacking lettuce. Spenser.

For though the cham-mil more it is trodden on the fastest it grows; yet youth, the more it is watted, the sooner it weans. Shakspeare.

Watery liquors force it, as distilled water with durticks, posset drink with cham-mil flowers. Flyder.

CHAMPE, v. a. [champayer, Fr.]

1. To bite with a frequent action of the teeth.

Coffee and opium are taken down, tobacco but in smoke, and betle is but champe'd in the mouth with a little lime. Bacon.

The fiend reply'd not, overcome with rage;

But, like a proud steed rein'd, went haughty on,

Champing his iron curb. Paradise Lost.

At his command,

The steeds caparison'd, with purple stand,

And champ betwix their teeth the foaming gold. Dryden.

2. To devour.

A tobacco pipe happened to break in my mouth, and the pieces left such a delicious roughness on my tongue, that I champed up the remaining part. Spectator.

CHAMPE, v. n. To perform frequently the action of biting.

Muttering and champing, as though his cud had troubled him,

he gave occasion to Mulrobin to come near him. Scotch.

They began to repent of that they had done, and irresolutely champ upon the bit they had taken into their mouths. Holier.

His jaws did not answer equally to one another; but by his frequent motion and champing with them, it was evident they were neither luxated nor fractured. Weyman.

CHAMPAIGN, n. f. [Champagne, Fr.] A flat open country.

In the abuses of the customs, meekness, you have a fair champaign laid open to you, in which you may at large stretch out your discourse. Spenser.

Of all these bounds,

With shadowy forests and with champaigns rich'd,

We make thee lady. Shakspeare.

If two bordering princes have their territory meeting on an open

CHANCRE, n. f. [chancre, Fr.] An ulcer usually arising from venereal maladies.

It is possible he was not well cured and would have relapsed with a chancre. Weyman.

CHANCROUS, adj. [from chancre.] Having the qualities of a chancre; ulcerous.

You may think I am too strict in giving so many internals in the cure of so small an ulcer as a chancre, or rather a chancre callus. Weyman.

CHANDELIER, n. f. [chandelier, Fr.] A branch for candles.

CHANDLER, n. f. [chandelier, Fr.] An artisan whose trade it is to make candles, or a person who sells them.

The fact that thou hadst drunken me, would have brought me lights as good cheap at the dearest chandlers in Europe. Shelley's Henry IV.

But whether black or lighter dies are worn, The chandler's basket, on his shoulder born, With tallow spots thy coat. Gay.

CHIFFRIN, n. f. [old French.] The forepart of the head of a horse, which extends from under the ears, along the interval between the eyebrows, down to his nose. Farrier's Dict.

CHANCE, v. a. [changer, Fr. camis, Lat.]

1. To put one thing in the place of another.

He that cannot look into his own estate, had need choose well whom he employeth, and change them often; for new are more timorous, and less subtle. Bacon.

2. To resign any thing for the sake of another, with for before the thing taken or received.

Persons grown up in the belief of any religion, cannot change that for another, without applying their understanding duly to consider and compare both. South.

The French and we still change; but here's the curse, They change for better, and we change for worse. Dryden's Spanish Friar, Prologue.

3. To discount a larger piece of money into several smaller.

A shopkeeper might be able to change a guinea, or a moiety, when a customer comes for a crown's worth of goods. Swift's Intemperance.

4. To give and take reciprocally, with the particle with before the person to whom we give, and from whom we take.

To secure thy content, look upon those thousands, with whom thou wouldst not, for any interit, change thy fortune and condition. Taylor.

5. To alter.

Thou shalt not see me bluish, Nor change my countenance for this arrest; A heart unsoften'd is not easily daunted. Shakespeare.

Whatever is brought upon thee, take cheerfully, and be patient when thou art changed to a low estate. Eccles. ii. 4.

For the elements were changed in themselves by a kind of humors, like as in a psalmist notes change the name of the times, and yet are always found. Hijim.

I am weary of this moon; would he would change. Shakespeare, Midsummer Night's Dream.

CHANGE, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An alteration of the state of any thing.

Since I saw you last, There is a change upon you. Shakespeare.

2. A succession of one thing in the place of another.

O wondrous change of a fatal scene, Still varying to the last! Dryden.

Nothing can cure this part of ill breeding, but change and variety of company, and that of persons above us. Luck.

Empires by various turns shall rise and set; While thy abandon'd tribes shall rise and set; A different master, and a change of time. Prior.

Hear how Timotheus' various lays surprize, And bid alternate passions fall and rise!

While, at each change, the son of Libyan Jove Now burns with glory, and then melts with love. Pope.

3. The time of the moon in which it begins a new monthly revolution.

Take seeds or roots, and set some of them immediately after the change, and others of the same kind immediately after the full. Bacon's Nat. History.

4. Novelty.

The hearts Of all his people shall revolt from him, And kiss the lips of unacquainted change. Shakespeare.

Our fathers did, for change, to France repair, And they, for change, will try our English air. Dryden's Spanish Friar, Prologue.

5. In ringing; an alteration of the order in which a set of bells is founded.

Four bells admitt twenty-four changes in ringing, and five bells one hundred and twenty. Holder.

Easy it may be to contrive new postures, and ring other changes upon the same bells. Norris.

6. That which makes a variety; that which may be used for another of the same kind.

I will now put forth a riddle unto you; if you can find it out, then I will give you thirty sheets, and thirty change of garments. Judges, xiv. 12.

7. Small money, which may be given for larger pieces.

Wood buys up our old halfpence, and from thence the present want of change arises; but supposing not one farthing of change in the nation, five and twenty thousand pounds would be sufficient. Swift.

CHANGEABLE, adj. [from change.]

1. Subject to change; fickle; inconstant.

A steady mind will admit steady methods and counsels; but there is no measure to be taken of a changeable humour. L'Estrange.

As I am a man, I must be changeable; and sometimes the gravest of us all are so, even upon ridiculous accidents. Dryden's Aurengzeib, Preface.

2. Possible to be changed.

The fibrous or vascular parts of vegetables seem scarce changeable in the alimentary duct. Arbutnot.

3. Having the quality of exhibiting different appearances.

Nox the tailor make thy doublet of changeable taffeta; for thy mind is a very opal. Shakespeare.

CHANGEABLENESS, n. f. [from changeable.]

1. Inconstancy; fickleness.

At length he betrothed himself to one worthy to be liked, if any worthiness might excuse so unworthy a changeableness. Sidney.

There is no temper of mind more unmanly than that changeableness with which we are too justly branded by all our neighbours. Adison.

2. Susceptibility of change.

If how long they are to continue in force, be no where expressed, then have we no light to direct our judgment concerning the changeableness or immutability of them, but considering the nature and quality of such laws. Hobbes.

CHANGEABLY, adv. [from changeable.] Inconstantly.

CHANGEFULLY, adj. [from change and full.] Full of change; inconstant; uncertain; mutable; subject to variation; fickle.

Unsound plots, and changeable orders, are daily devised for her good, yet never effectually prosecuted or performed. Spenser in Ireland.

Britain, changeable as a child at play, Now calls in princes, and now turns away. Pope.

CHANGELING, n. f. [from change; the word arises from an old superstitious opinion, that the fairies steal away children, and put others that are ugly and stupid in their places.]

1. A child left or taken in the place of another.

And her babe elfin breed thee for the left; Such, men do changelings call, so change'd by fairies theft. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

She, as her attendant, hath A lovely boy stol'n from an Indian king; She never had so sweet a changeling. Shakespeare, Midsummer Night's Dream.

2. An idiot; a fool; a natural.

Changelings and fools of heav'n, and thence shut out, Wildly we roam in discontent about. Dryden.

Would any one be a changeling, because he is less determined by wife considerations than a wife man? Locke.

3. One apt to change; a waverer.

'Twas not long Before from world to world they swung; As they had turn'd from side to side, And as they changelings liv'd, they dy'd. H. dibras.

CHANGER, n. f. [from change.] One that is employed in changing or discounting money.

CHANNEL, n. f. [canal, Fr. canalis, Lat.]

1. The hollow bed of running waters.

It is not so easy, now that things are grown into an habit, and have their certain course, to change the channel, and turn their streams another way. Spenser.

Draw

Draw them to Tyber's bank, and weep your tears
 Into the channel, till the lowest stream
 Do kiss the most exalted shores of all. Shakspeare.
 So th' injur'd sea, which, from her wonted course,
 To gain some acres, avarice did force;
 If the new banks, neglected once, decay,
 No longer will from her old channel stay. Waller.
 Had not the said strata been dislocated, some of them elevated, and others depressed, there would have been no cavity or channel in give reception to the water of the sea. Woodward.
 The tops of mountains and hills will be continually washed down by the rains, and the channels of rivers abraded by the streams. Bentley.

2. Any cavity drawn longways.
 Complaint and hot desires, the lover's hell,
 And scalding tears, that wore a channel where they fell.
Dryden's Fables.

3. A strait or narrow sea, between two countries; as the British Channel between Britain and France; St. George's Channel between Britain and Ireland.

4. A gutter or furrow of a pillar.
 To CHANNELED. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut any thing in channels.

No more shall trenching war channel her fields,
 Nor bruise her flowrets with the armed hoofs
 Of hostile paces. Shakspeare, Henry IV.
 The body of this column is perpetually channelled, like a thick plaited gown. Watson's Architecture.
 Torrents, and loud impetuous cataracts,
 Roll down the lofty mountain's channel'd sides,
 And to the vale convey their foaming tides. Blackmore.

1. To sing.
 Wherein the cheerful birds of sundry kind
 Do chant sweet music. Fairy Queen.
 2. To celebrate by song.
 The poets chant it in the theatres, the shepherds in the mountains. Bramhall.
 3. To sing in the cathedral service.
 To CHANT. v. n. To sing, to make melody with the voice.
 They chant to the found of the viol, and invent to themselves instruments of music. Anon, vi. 7.
 Heav'n heard his song, and hasten'd his relief;
 And chang'd to snowy plumes his hoary hair,
 And wing'd his flight, to chant aloft in air. Dryden.
 CHANT. n. f. [from the verb.] Song's melody.
 A pleasant grove,
 With chant of tuneful birds resounding loud.

Milton's Paradise Lost.
 CHAN'TER. n. f. [from chant.] A singer; a songster.

You curious chanters of the wood,
 That warble forth dame Nature's lays. Wotton.
 Jove's editorial days, refutless fire,
 The chanter's soul, and rapur'd song inspire,
 Instinct divine! nor blame severe his choice,
 Warbling the Grecian words with harp and voice. Pope.

CHAN'TICLEER. n. f. [from chanter and choir, Fr.] The name given to the cock, from the clearness and loudness of his crow.

And cheerful chanticleer, with his note shrill,
 Had warn'd once, that Phœbus' fiery car
 In haste was climbing up the eastern hill. Fairy Queen.

Hark, hark, I hear
 The strain of strutting chanticleer. Shakspeare.
 Stay, the cheerful chanticleer
 Tells you that the time is near. Ben. Jonson.
 These verses were mentioned by Chaucer, in the description of the sudden stir, and panical fear, when Chanticleer the cock was carried away by Reynard the fox. Camden.

Within this homestead liv'd without a peer,
 For crowing loud, the noble chanticleer. Dryden.

CHAN'TRESS. n. f. [from chant.] A woman singer.
 Sweet bird, that flun'th the noise of folly,
 Most musical, most melancholy,
 Thee, chantress of the woods among,
 I woo to hear thy even-song. Milton.

CHANTRY. n. f. [from chant.]
 CHANTRY is a church or chapel endowed with lands; or other yearly revenue, for the maintenance of one or more priests, daily to sing masses for the souls of the donors, and such others as they appoint. Cowley.

Now go with me, and with this holy man,
 Into the chantry by; to those before him,
 And, underneath that consecrated roof,
 Plight me the full assurance of your faith. Shakspeare.

CHAOS. n. f. [chaos, Lat. chaos.]
 1. The mass of matter supposed to be in confusion before it was divided by the creation into its proper classes and elements.
 The whole universe would have been a confused chaos, without beauty or order. Bentley.

2. Confusion; irregular mixture.
 Had I followed the world, I could not have brought church and state to such a chaos of confusions, as some have done.
K. Charles.

Their reason sleeps, but mimic fancy wakes,
 Supplies her parts, and wild ideas takes
 From words and things, ill sorted, and misjoin'd,
 The anarchy of thought, and chaos of the mind. Dryden.
 3. Any thing where the parts are undistinguished.
 We shall have nothing but darkness and a chaos within, whatever order and light there be in things without us. Locke.
 Pleas'd with a work, where nothing's just or fit,
 One glaring chaos and wild heap of wit.

CHAOTICK. adj. [from chaos.] Resembling chaos; confused.
 When the terraqueous globe was in a chaotick state, and the earthy particles subside, then those several beds were, in all probability, reposit in the earth. Darwin.

To CHAP. v. a. [chappen, Dutch, to cut.] This word seems originally the same with chap; nor were they probably distinguished at first, otherwise than by accident; but they have now a meaning something different, though referable to the same original sense. To break into chaps, or gappings.
 It also weakened more and more the arch of the earth, dying it immediately, and chapping it in sundry places.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 Then would unbalance'd heat licentious reign,
 Crack the dry hill, and chap the rusted plain. Blackmore.
 CHAP. n. f. [from the verb.] A cleft; an aperture; an opening; a gaping; a chink.

What moisture the heat of the summer sucks out of the earth, it is repaid in the rains of the next winter; and what chaps are made in it, are filled up again. Burnet.
 CHAP. n. f. [This is not often used, except by anatomists, in the singular.] The upper or under part of a beast's mouth.

Froth fills his chaps, he sends a grunting sound.
 And part he churns, and part he foams the ground. Dryden.
 The nether chap in the male skeleton is half an inch broader than in the female, as being made to accommodate a bigger muscle for the motion of the teeth. Grew's Anatomy.

CHAPE. n. f. [chappe, Fr.]

1. The catch of any thing by which it is held in its place; as the hook of a scabbard by which it sticks in the belt; the point by which a buckle is held to the back strap.

This is Monsieur Parolles, that had the whole theory of the war in the knot of his scarf, and the practice in the chaps of his dagger. Shakspeare. All's well that ends well.

2. A brass or silver tip or case, that strengthens the end of the scabbard of a sword. Pulliam's World of Words.

CHAPEL. n. f. [capella, Lat.]

A chapel is of two sorts, either adjoining to a church, as a parcel of the same, which men of worth build, or else separate from the mother church, where the parish is wide, and is commonly called a chapel of ease, because it is built for the ease of one or more parishioners, that dwell too far from the church, and is served by some inferior curate, provided for at the charge of the rector, or of such as have benefit by it, as the composition or custom is. Cowley.

She went in among those few trees, so closed in the tops together, as they might seem a little chapel. Waller.

Will you dispatch us here under this tree, or shall we go with you to your chapel? Shakspeare.

Where truth erecteth her church, he helps error to rest up a chapel hard by. Dryden.

A chapel will I build with large endowment.
 A free chapel is such as is founded by the king of England.
Ascham's Peragon.

CHAPELESS. adj. [from chapel.] Without a chapel.
 An old rusty sword, with a broken hilt, and chapeless, with two broken points. Shakspeare.

CHAPELLANY. n. f. [from chapel.]
 A chapellany is usually said to be that which does not subsist of itself, but is built and founded within some other church, and is dependent thereon. Ascham's Peragon.

CHAPELRY. n. f. [from chapel.] The jurisdiction or bounds of a chapel.

CHAPERON. n. f. [French.] A kind of hood or cap worn by the knights of the garter in their habits.

I will omit the honourable habiliments, as robes of state, parliament robes, chaperons, and caps of state. Camden.

CHAPEFALN. adj. [from chap and faln.] Having the mouth shut.

A chapefaln beaver loosely hanging by
 The cloven helmet. Dryden.

CHAPITER. n. f. [chapiteau, Fr.] The upper part or capital of a pillar.

He overlaid your chapiters and your fillets with gold.
Isidorus, xxvii. 8.

CHAPLAIN. n. f. [capellanus, Latin.] He that performs divine service in a chapel, and attends the king, or other person, for the instruction of him and his family, to read prayers, and preach. Cowley.

Willing me to permit
 John de la Court, my chaplain, a choice-hour,
 To hear from him a matter of some moment. Shakspeare.

Chaplain, away! thy priesthood faves thy life.
Shakspeare. Henry VI.

A chief governor can never fail of some worthless illiterate chaplain, fond of a title and precedence. Swift.

CHA'PLAINSHIP. n. f. [from chaplain.]

1. The office or business of a chaplain.

2. The possession or revenue of a chapel.

CHA'PLESS. adj. [from chap.] Without any flesh about the mouth.

Now my lady Worm's chapless, and knocked about the muzzard with a fexton's spade. Shakespeare.

Shut me nightly in a channel-houfe,

With recky flanks and yellow chapless bones. Shakespeare. Romeo and Juliet.

CHA'PLET. n. f. [chaplet, Fr.]

1. A garland or wreath to be worn about the head.

Upon old hyems' chin, and iey crown,

An od'rous chaplet of sweet summer's buds,

Is, as in mockery, set. Shakespeare.

I strangely long to know,

Whether they nobler chaplets wear,

Those that their mistresses' scorn did bear,

Or those that were us'd kindly. Suckling.

All the quire was grac'd

With chaplets green, upon their foreheads plac'd. Dryden.

The winding ivy chaplet to invade,

And folded fern, that your fair forehead shade. Dryden.

They with joyful nimble wing,

Flew dutifully back again, Swift.

2. A thing of beads used in the Romish church for keeping an account of the number rehearsed of pater noster and ave marias.

A different sort of chaplet is also used by the Mahometans.

3. [In architecture.] A little moulding carved into round beads, pearls, or olives.

4. [In horsemanship.] A couple of stirrup leathers, mounted each of them with a stirrup, and joining at top in a sort of leather buckle, which is called the head of the chaplet, by which they are fastened to the pommel of a saddle, after they have been adjusted to the length and bearing of the rider. They are made use of both to avoid the trouble of taking up or letting down the stirrups, every time a person mounts on a different horse and saddle, and to supply the want of academy faddies, which have no stirrups to them. Farrier's Dict.

5. A tuft of feathers on the peacock's head.

CHA'PSMAN. n. f. [cepsman, Sax.] A chespnor; one that offers as a purchaser.

Fair Diomedes, you do as chapmen do,

Dispraise the thing that you intend to buy. Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.

Yet have they seen the maps, and bought 'em too,

And understand 'em as most chapmen do. Ben. Jonson.

There was a collection of certain rare manuscripts, exquisitely written in Arabic; these were upon sale to the Jews at Amserp, liquorish chapmen of such wares. Watson.

He drick'd two, and carried them to Samos, as the likeliest place for a chapman. L'Estrange.

Their chapmen they betray,

Their shops are dens, the buyer is their prey. Dryden.

CHA'P. n. f. [from chap.]

1. The mouth of a beast of prey.

So on the downs we see

A hiffen'd hare from greedy greyhound go,

And pull all hope, his chap to frustrate so. Sidney.

Open your mouth; this will shake your shakings, I can tell you, and that soundly; you cannot tell who's your friend; open your chap again. Shakespeare.

Their whelps at home expect the promis'd food,

And long to temper their dry chaps in blood. Dryden.

2. It is used in contempt for the mouth of a man.

CHA'PT. particip. pass. [from to chap.]

Like a table upon which you may run your finger without rub, and your nail cannot find a joint; not horrid, rough, wrinkled, gaping, or chapt. Ben. Jonson.

Cooling ointment made,

Which on their sun-burnt cheeks and their chapt skins they laid. Dryden.

CHA'PT. n. f. [chapitre, Fr. from capitulum, Lat.]

1. A division of a book.

The first book we divide into three sections; whereof the first is these three chapters. Burnet.

If these mighty men at chapter and verse, can produce then no scripture to overthrow our church ceremonies, I will undertake to produce scripture enough to warrant them. South.

2. From hence comes the proverbial phrase, to the end of the chapter; throughout; to the end.

Money does all things; for it gives and it takes away, it makes honest men and knaves, fools and philosophers; and so forward, mutatis mutandis, to the end of the chapter. L'Estrange.

3. Chapter, from capitulum, signifieth, in our common law, as in the canon law, whence it is borrowed, an assembly of the clergy of a cathedral or collegiate church. Cowel.

N° XXIII.

The abbot takes the advice and consent of his chapter, before he enters on any matters of importance. Milton.

4. The place in which assemblies of the clergy are held.

Though the canonical constitution does not strictly require it to be made in the cathedral, yet it matters not where it be made, either in the choir or chapter house. Adiſſon.

5. The place where delinquents receive discipline and correction.

6. A decretal epistle.

 cur or unintelligible power.

I never knew a woman so dote upon a man; surely I think you have charms.—Not I, I assure thee; setting the attraction of my good parts aside, I have no other charms.
Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

There have been ever used, either barbarous words, of no sense, lest they should disturb the imagination, or words of simi-litude, that may seduce and feed the imagination: and this was ever as well in heathen charms, as in charms of later times.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Alcyone he names amidst his prayers,
 Names as a charm against the waves and wind,
 Molt in his mouth, and ever in his mind. Dryden.
 Antaeus could, by magic charms,
 Recover strength, whene'er he fell. Swift.

2. Something of power to subdue opposition, and gain the affections.

Well founding verses are the charm we use,
 Heroick thoughts and virtue to infuse. Recommen.
 But what avail her unexhausted stores,
 Her blooming mountains and her sunny shores,
 With all the gifts that heaven and earth impart,
 The smiles of nature, and the charms of art,
 While proud oppression in her valleys reigns,
 And tyranny usurps her happy plains? Adisson.

To CHARM. v. a. [from the noun.]

 And seems to have renew'd her charter's date,
 Which heav'n will to the death of time allow. Dryden.

2. Any writing bestowing privileges or rights.

It is not to be wonder'd, that the great charter whereby God bestowed the whole earth upon Adam, and confirmed it unto the sons of Noah, being as brief in word as large in effect, hath bred much quarrel of interpretation. Raleigh.

God renewed this charter of man's sovereignty over the creatures. South.

3. Privilege; immunity; exemption.

I must have liberty,
 Withal as large a charter as the wind,
 To blow on whom I please; for so fools have;
 And they that are most gauled with my folly,
 They most must laugh. Shakespeare.

My mother,
 Who has a charter to extol her blood,
 When she does praise me, grieves me. Shakespeare.

CHARTER-PARTY. n. f. [chartre partie, Fr.] A paper relating

That all the courts of France will be diſturb'd

With chafes. Shakespeare.

6. The game hunted.

She, ſeeing the towering of her purſued chafe, went circling about, riſing to with the leiſe fence of riſing. Sidney.

Hold, Warwick: ſeek thee out ſome other chafe,

For I myſelf muſt put this deer to death. Shakespeare.

Honour's the nobleſt chafe; purſue that game,

And recompence the loſs of love with fame. Granville.

7. Open ground flored with ſuch beaſts as are hunted.

A receptacle for deer and game, of a middle nature between a foreſt and a park; being commonly leſs than a foreſt, and not endowed with ſo many liberties; and yet of a larger compaſs, and flored with greater diverſity of game than a park. A chaf differs from a foreſt in this, becauſe it may be in the hands of a ſubject, which a foreſt, in its proper nature, cannot; and from a park, in that it is not incloſed, and hath not only a larger compaſs, and more ſtore of game, but likewiſe more keepers and overſeers. Crauel.

He and his lady both are at the lodge,

Upon the northſide of this pleaſant chafe. Shakespeare.

8. The CHASE of a gun, is the whole bore or length of a piece, uſen withinſide. Chimber.

CHASE-GUN. n. f. [from chafe and gun.] Guns in the forepart of the ſhip, fired upon thoſe that are purſued.

Mean time the Belgians tack upon our rear,

And raking chafe-guns through our ſtern they ſend. Dryden.

CHAS'ER. n. f. [from chafe.] Hunter; purſuer; driver.

Then began

A ſtop 't' th' chafers, a retire; anon

A rout, conſuſion thick. Shakespeare.

So fall he flies, that his reviewing eye

Has loſt the chafers, and his ear the cry. Denham.

Stretch'd on the lawn, his ſecond hope ſurvey,

At once the chafers, and at once the prey,

Lo Ruſus tugging at the deadly hart,

Bleeds in the foreſt like a wounded hart. Pope.

CHASM. n. f. [γάρμα.]

1. A breach uncloſed; a cleft; a gape; an opening.

In all that viſible corporeal world, we ſee no chajms or gaps. Locke.

thus diſcovered and *chafte*d. Boyle.

How ſeldom is the world affrighted or *chafte*d with ſigns or prodigies, earthquakes or inundations, famines or plagues? Grew.

Like you, commiſſion'd to chafte and bleſs,

He muſt avenge the world, and give it peace. Prior.

2. To reduce to order, or obedience.

Hee thee hither,

That I may pour my ſins in thine ear,

And chafte, with the valour of my tongue,

All that impoſes thee. Shakespeare.

Know, fir, that I

Will not wait pinion'd at your maſter's court,

Nor once be *chafte*d with the ſober eye

Of dull Oclavia. Shakespeare.

The gay ſocial ſenſe

By decency *chafte*d. Thompson.

CHASTISEMENT. n. f. [chafte, Fr.] Correction; puniſhment.

Theſe words are all commonly, though not always,

uſed of domeſtick or parental puniſhment.

Shall I ſo much diſhonour my fair ſiſter,

On equal terms to give him *chafte*ment? Shakespeare.

He held the *chafte*ment of one which moleſted the ſee of Rome, pleaſing to God. Raleigh.

For ſeven years what can a child be guilty of, but lying, or ill-natur'd tricks; the repeated commiſſion of which ſhall bring him to the *chafte*ment of the rod. Locke.

He receives a fit of ſickneſs as the kind *chafte*ment and diſci-pline of his heavenly father, to wean his affections from the world. Bentley.

CHASTITY. n. f. [caſtita, Lat.]

1. Purity of the body.

Who can be bound by any ſolemn vow,

To force a ſpooleſs virgin's *chafte*ty? Shakespeare.

*Chafte*ty is either abſtinenſe or continence: abſtinenſe is that of virgins or widows; continence of married perſons;

chafte marriages are honourable and pleaſing to God. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

Ev'n here where frozen *chafte*ty retires,

Love finds an altar for forbidden fires. Pope.

2. Freedom from obſcenity.

There is not *chafte*ty enough in language,

Without offence to utter them. Shakespeare.

3. Freedom from bad mixture of any kind.

a puniſher; a corrector.

CHASTLY. adv. [from chafte.] Without incontinence; purely; without contamination.

You ſhould not paſs here: no, though it were as virtuous to lie as to live *chafte*ly. Shakespeare.

Make fiſt a long of joy and love,

Which *chafte*ly flame in royal eyes. Wotton.

Succession of a long descent,
Which chafly in the channels ran,
And from our demi-gods began.

Dryden.

CHA'FTNESS, n. f. [from chafte.] Chastity; purity.

7. CHAT, v. n. [from chatter, Fr. Stinner; perhaps from achat, purchase or cheapening, on account of the prate naturally produced in a bargain; or only, as it is most likely, contracted from chatter.] To prate; to talk idly; to prattle; to cackle; to chatter; to converse at ease.

Thus chatten the people in their flocks,
Ylike as a monster of many heads.

Spenser.

Because that I familiarly sometimes,
Do use you for my fool, and chat with you,
Your fauciness will jest upon my love.

Shakspeare, Comedy of Errors.

All tongues speak of him, and the bleared lights
Are spectacles to see him. Your prattling nurse
Into a rapture lets her baby cry,

Shakspeare.

While she chats to him.

The shepherds on the lawn
Sat simply chatting on a ruffick row.

Milton.

With much goodwill the motion was embrac'd,
To chat a while on their adventures pass'd.

Dr. den.

CHAT, n. f. [from the verb.] Idle talk; prate; slight or negligent tale.

Lords that can prate

As amply and unnecessarily,
As this Gonzalo, I myself would make

Shakspeare.

A chough of as deep chat.

The time between before the fire they fat,
And shorten'd the delay by pleasing chat.

Dryden.

The least is no inconsiderable good, but such as he confesses is far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine, or the idle chat of a smoking club.

L'Esprit.

Snuff, or the fan, supplies each pause of chat,

Pope.

With fingering, laughing, ogling, and all that.

CHAT, n. f. The keys of trees are called chats, as ash chats.

CHA'TELLARY, n. f. [châtellain, Fr.] The district under the dominion of a castle.

Here are about twenty towns and forts of great importance, with their châtellaries and dependencies.

Dryden.

CHA'TTEL, n. f. [See CATTLE.] Any moveable possession: a term now scarce used but in forms of law.

Nay, look not big, nor stamp, nor flare, nor fret;

I will be master of what is mine own;

Shakspeare.

She is my good, my chattel.

Honour's a leaf for lives to come,

And cannot be extended from
The legal tenant: 'tis a chattel

Hudibras.

Not to be forfeited in battle.

7. CHA'TTER, v. n. [chatter, Fr.]

1. To make a noise as a pie, or other unharmonious bird.

Nightingales seldom fly, the pie still chattereth.

Steele.

So doth the cuckoo, when the mavis sings,

Begin his wileless not apace to chatter.

Spenser.

There was a crow fat chattering upon the back of a sheep;

Well, sirrah, says the sheep, you durst not have done this to a dog.

L'Estrange.

Your birds of knowledge, that in dusky air
Chatter fatuity.

Dryden and Let's OEdipus.

2. To make a noise by collision of the teeth.

They come to us, but us how draws;

He swallows us, and never chaws;

He is the tyrant pike, and we the fry.

Donne.

Whether he found any use of chawing little sponges, dipt in oil, in his mouth, when he was perfectly under water, and at a distance from his engine.

Boyle.

The man who laugh but once to see an ass
Mumbling to make the cross-grain'd thistles pass,
Might laugh again, to see a jury chaw
The prickles of unpalatable law.

Dryden.

CHAW, n. f. [from the verb.] The chap; the upper or under part of a beal's mouth.

I will turn thee back, and put hooks into thy chaws, and will bring thee forth and all thine army.

For the ingredients of our cauldron,

Shakspeare.

CHEAP, adj. [capian, Sax. keapan, Dutch, to buy.]

1. To be had at a low rate; purchased for a small price.

Where there are a great many sellers to a few buyers, there the thing to be sold will be cheap. On the other side, raise up a great many buyers for a few sellers, and the same thing will immediately turn dear.

L'Esprit.

2. Of small value; easy to be had; not respected.

The goodness, that is cheap in beauty, makes

Shakspeare.

Peauty brief in goodness.

Had I so lavish of my preference been,
So common hackney'd in the eyes of men,
So stale and cheap to vulgar company.

Shakspeare.

He that is too much in any thing, so that he giveth another occasion of satiety, maketh himself cheap.

Bacon.

May your sick fame still languish till it die,
And you grow cheap in every subject's eye.

Dryden.

The usual titles of distinction, which belong to us, are turned into terms of derision and reproach, and every way is taken by prophane men, towards rendering us cheap and contemptible.

Atturbury.

CHEAP, n. f. [cheaping is an old word for market; whence Engl- cheap, Chapfale.] Market; purchase; bargain; as good cheap, [à bon marché, Fr.]

The same wine that comes ought of Candia, which we pay so dear for now a days, in that good world was very good cheap.

It is many a man's case to tire himself out with hunting after that absurd, which he carries about him all the while, and may have it better cheap at home.

L'Estrange.

Some few insulting cowards, who love to vapour good deas, may trample on those who give little resistance.

D'neij of Paris.

To CHE'APEN, v. a. [capian, Sax. to buy.]

1. To attempt to purchase; to bid for any thing; to ask the price of any commodity.

Rich he shall be, that's certain; wife, or I'll none; virtuous, or I'll never cheapen her; fair, or I'll never look on her.

Shakspeare.

The first he cheapened was a Jupiter, which would have come at a very easy rate.

L'Estrange.

So in a morning, without bodice,
Slit sometimes out to Mrs. Thody's,

Prior.

To cheapen tea.

To shops in crowds the daggled females fly,
Pretend to cheapen goods, but nothing buy.

Swift.

2. To sell value.

My hopes pursue a brighter diadem.
Can any brighter than the Roman be?

Dryden.

I find my proffer'd love has cheapen'd me.

CHE'APLY, adv. [from cheap.] At a small price; at a low rate.

By their I see

Shakspeare.

So great a day as this is cheaply bought.

Dryden.

So might recompence your beauty brought.

CHE'APNESS, n. f. [from cheap.] Low price of price.

Ancient statutes incite merchant strangers to bring in commodities; having for end cheapness.

Bacon.

The discredit which is grown upon this kingdom, has been the great discouragement to other nations to transplant themselves hither, and prevailed farther than all the invitations which the cheapness and plenty of the country has made them.

Temple.

CHEAR, See CHERE.

7. CHEAT, v. a. [of uncertain derivation; probably from a. chater, Fr. to purchase, alluding to the tricks used in making bargains. See the noun.]

1. To defraud; to impose upon; to trick. It is used commonly of low cunning.

It is a dangerous commerce, where an honest man is sure at first of being cheated; and he recovers not his losses, but by learning to cheat others.

Dryden.

There are a sort of people who find that the most effectual way to cheat the people, is always to pretend to infallible cures.

Temple.

2. It has of before the thing taken away by fraud.

I that am curtail'd by this fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
Deform'd, unfinish'd.

Shakspeare.

CHEAT, n. f. [from the verb. Some think abbreviated from cheater, because many fraudulent measures being taken by the lords of manours in procuring effects, cheat the abridgment was brought to convey a bad meaning.]

1. A fraud; a trick; an imposture.

The pretence of publick good is a cheat that will ever pass, though so abused by ill men, that I wonder the good do not grow ashamed to use it.

Temple.

L'Esprit.

Emp'rick politicians use deceit,
Hide what they give, and cure but by a cheat. Dryden.
When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat;
Yet, fool'd with hope, men favour the deceit:
Trust on, and think tomorrow will repay;
Tomorrow's falser than the former day;
Lies worse; and while it says, we shall be blest,
With some new joys cuts off what we possess. Dryden.

B. A person guilty of fraud.

Diffimulation can be no further useful than it is concealed;
for as much as no man will trust a known cheat. Sauts.

Like that notorious cheat, vault fums I give,
Only that you may keep me while I live. Dryden.

CH'S'ATER. n. f. [from cheat.] One that practises fraud.
I will be cheater to them both, and they shall be exchequers to me. [It is here for exchequer.] Shakspeare.

They lay this town is full of couzenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Disguised choaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like liberties of sin. Shakspeare.

He is no swaggerer, hostess; I a tame cheater I faith.—
Chater, call you him? I will bar no honest man my house, nor no cheater. Shakspeare.

All sorts of injurious persons, the sacrilegious, the detainers of tithes, cheaters of mens inheritances, false witnesses and scoundrels. Taylor.

7. CHECK. v. a. [from the French chequer, cheff; from whence we use, at that game, the term chessmate, when we stop our adversary from carrying on his play any further.]

1. To repress; to curb.

Refract thy state; with better judgment check
This hideous rashness. Shakspeare.
How fumes may be fown and raised, how they may be spread and multiplied, and how they may be checked and laid dead.
Bacon's Essays.

I hate when vice can bolt her arguments,
And virtue has no tongue to check her pride. Milton.
He who sat at a table, richly and deliciously furnished, but with a sword hanging over his head by one single thread or hair, surely had enough to check his appetite. Sauts.

2. To reprove; to chide.

Richard, with his eye brinsful of tears,
Then check'd and rated by Northumberland,
Did speak these words, now prov'd a prophecy. Shakspeare.
His fault is much, and the good king his master
Will check him for't. Shakspeare.

3. To compare a bank note or other bill, with the correspondent cipher.

4. To control by a counter reckoning.

7. CHECK. v. n.

1. To stop; to make a stop: with at. Shakspeare.

With what wing the flannet checks at it.
He must observe their mood on whom he jests,
The quality of the persons, and the time;
And, like the haggard, check at every feather
That comes before his eye. Shakspeare.

refrain and check, for some time, to his immoderate pretences and appetite of power. Clarendon.

Some free from rhyme or reason, rule or check,
Break Priscian's head, and Pegasus's neck. Pope.

While such men are in trust, who have no check from within, nor any views but towards their interest. Swift.

3. A reproof; a flight.

Oh! this life

Is nobler than attending for a check;
Richer than doing nothing for a bauble. Shakspeare.

4. A dislike; a sudden disgust; something that stops the progress.

Say I should wed her, would not my wife subside?
Take check, and think it strange? perhaps revolt? Dryden.

5. In falconry, is when a hawk forsakes her proper game to follow rooks, pies, or other birds that cross her in her flight.

Chambers.

A young woman is a hawk upon her wings; and if she be handsome, she is the more subjed to go out on check. Suckling.

When whil'd from the fill,

Some falcon stops at what her eye design'd;
And with her excrements, the quarry mis'd,
Straight flies at check, and clips it down the wind. Dryden.

TO CHEER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To incite; to encourage; to inspirit.

He complain'd in vain that he was betrayed: yet, for all that, he was nothing discouraged, but cheer'd up his footmen.

He cheer'd the dogs to follow her who fled,
And vow'd revenge on her devoted head.

2. To comfort; to console.

I died ere I could lend thee aid;
But cheer thy heart, and be thou not dismay'd.

Displeas'd at what, not suffering, they had seen,
They went to cheer the faction of the green.

3. To gladden.

Hark! a glad voice the lonely desert cheers;
Prepare the way, a God, a God appears.

The face d' tun, above the waters rais'd,
Thro' heaven's eternal brazen portals blas'd,
And wide o'er earth diffus'd his cheering ray.

TO CHEER. v. n. To grow gay or gladsome.

At sight of thee my gloomy soul cheers up;
My hopes revive, and gladness dawns within me.

CHE'ERER. n. f. [from to cheer.] Gladner; giver of gaiety.

To thee alone be praise,
From whom our joy descends,

Thou cheerer of our days,
Angling was, after tedious study, a rest to his mind, a cheerer of his spirits, a diverter of sadness, a calmer of unquiet thoughts.

Saffron is the safest and most simple cordial, the greatest reviver of the heart, and cheerer of the spirits.

Of all material beings first and best.
CHE'ERFUL. adj. [from cheer and full.]

1. Gay; full of life; full of mirth.

The cheerful birds of sundry kind
Do chaunt fewest music to delight his mind.

2. Having an appearance of gaiety.

A merry heart maketh a cheerful countenance: but by for-row of the heart the spirit is broken.

CHE'ERFULLY. adv. [from cheerful.] Without dejection; with willingness; with gaiety.

Pluck up thy spirits, look cheerfully upon me.

Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.
To their known stations cheerfully they go.

Doctrine is that which must prepare men for discipline and men never go on so cheerfully as when they see where they go.

That cheerfully recounts the female's praise,
Find equal love, and love's untainted sweets
Enjoy with honour.

CHE'ERFULNESS. n. f. [from cheerful.]

1. Freedom from dejection; alacrity.

With what resolution and cheerfulness, with what courage and patience, did vast numbers of all sorts of people, in the first ages of christianity, encounter all the rage and malice of the world, and embrace torments and death.

2. Freedom from gloominess.

I remember, then I marvel'd to see her receive my commandments with sighs, and yet do them with cheerfulness.

CHE'ERLESS. adj. [from cheer.] Without gaiety, content, or gladness.

For since mine eye your joyous sight did miss,
My cheerful day is turn'd to cheerless night.

On a bank, beside a willow,
Heav'n her covering, earth her pillow,
Sad Amynta sigh'd alone,

From the cheerless dawn of morning,
Till the dews of night returning,
Cheerless towns, far distant, never blest'd.

CHE'ERLY. adv. [from cheer.] 1. Gay; cheerful.

They are useful to mankind, in affording them convenient situations of houses and villages, reflecting the benign and cherishing sun-beams, and so rendering their habitations both more comfortable and more cheerly in winter.

Under heavy arms the youth of Rome
Their long laborious marches overcame;
Cheerly their tedious travels undergo.

2. Not gloomy.

CHE'ERLY. adv. [from cheer.] Cheerfully.

In God's name, cheer you on, courageous friend,
To reap the harvest of perpetual peace,

By this one bloody trial of sharp war.
Oft listening how the hounds and horn
Cheerly rouse the slumbering morn.

CHE'ERY. adj. [from cheer.] Gay; sprightly; having the power to make gay.

Come, let us lie, and quaff a cheery bowl;
Let cider new with sorrow from my bowl.

CHEESE. n. f. [cheese, Lat. caseus, Sax. casu.] A kind of food made by pressing the curd of coagulated milk, and salting
the mass to dry.

I will rather trust a Fleming with my butter, parson Hugh the Welchman with my cheese, than my wife with bread.

CHE'ESCAKE. n. f. [from cheese and cake.] A cake made of soft curds, sugar, and butter.

Effeminate he fat, and quiet;
Strange product of a cheesecake diet.

Where many a man at variance with his wife,
With soiling meal and cheesecake ends the strife.

CHE'ESMONGER. n. f. [from cheese and monger.] One who deals in cheese.

A true owl of London,
That gives out he is undone,
Being a cheesemonger,

By trusting.

CHE'ESPRESS. n. f. [from cheese and press.] The press in which the curds are pressed.

The cleanly cheesepress she could never turn,
Her awkward fill did ne'er employ the churn.

CHE'ESVAT. n. f. [from cheese and vatt.] The wooden cask in which the curds are confined when they are pressed into cheese.

His sense occasions the careless rustic to judge the sun no bigger than a cheesvat.

CHE'ESY. adj. [from cheese.] Having the nature or form of cheese.

Acids mixed with them precipitate a tephaceous chalybeate mixture, but not a cheesy subsalt.

CHE'LY. n. f. [chele, Lat.] The claw of a shell fish.

It happeneth often, I confess, that a lobster hath the chele or great claw, of one side longer than the other.

CHEMISTRY. See CHYMISTRY.

CH'QUER. See CHEEKER.

TO CHERISH. v. a. [cherish, Fr.] To support and forward with encouragement, help, and protection; to shelter; to nurture up.

Whenever Buckingham doth turn his hate
Upon your grace, and not with dutious love
Doth cherish you and yours, God punish me
With hate in those where I expect most love.

I would I were thy bird.
Sweet, so would I;
But I should kill thee with too much cherishing.

What doth cherish weeds; but gentle air?
Magistrates should always thought themselves concerned to cherish religion, and to maintain in the minds of men the belief of a God and another life.

But old god Saturn, which doth all devour,
Doth cherish her, and still augments her might. Deviest.
He that knowingly commits an ill, has the upbraidings of his own conscience; those who act by error, have its cherishings and encouragements to confirm and animate them.

Deuty of Pity.

CHERISH. n. f. [from cherish.] An encourager; a supporter.

One of their greatest praises it is to be the maintainers and cherishers of a regular devotion, a reverend worship, a true and decent piety. Spratt's Sermons.

CHERISHMENT. n. f. [from cherish.] Encouragement; support; comfort. It is now obsolete.

The one lives, her age's ornament,
That with rich bounty and dear cherishments,
Supports the praise of noble poudie. Spenser.

CHERRY.

CHERRY-TREE. n. f. [crisje, Fr. cerasus, Lat.]

The tree hath large shining leaves: the fruit grows on long pedicles, and is roundish or heart-shaped; the stone is short, tumid, and roundish. The species are; 1. The common red or garden cherry. 2. Large Spanish cherry.
3. The red heart cherry. 4. The white heart cherry.
5. The bleeding heart cherry. 6. The black heart cherry.
7. The May cherry. 8. The black cherry, or mazzard.

11. The Flanders cluster cherry. 12. The carnation cherry.
13. The large black cherry. 14. The bird cherry. 15. The red bird or Cornish cherry. 16. The double flowered cherry. 17. The double flowered cherry. 18. The common wild cherry. 19. The wild northern English cherry, with late ripe fruit. 20. The shock or perfumed cherry.
21. The cherry tree with striped leaves. And many other sorts of cherries; as the amber cherry, lukewarm, corouse, Gaskoigne, and the morello, which is chiefly planted for preparing.

This fruit was brought out of Pontus at the time of the Mithridatic victory, by Lucullus, in the year of Rome 680;
and was brought into Britain about 120 years afterward, which was A. Dom. 55; and was soon after spread through most parts of Europe. It is generally esteemed for its earliness, being of the first tree-fruits that appears to welcome in the fruit-season. Miller.

Some derive it from the parings of one's nail, a pin, a nut,
a cherry stone; but this, more covetous, would have a chain.

July I would have drawn in a jacket of light-yellow, eating cherries, with his face and bosom sun-burnt. Peasam.

All this done by a little spark of life, which, in its first appearance, might be inclosed in the hollow of a cherry stone.
Hall's Orig. of Manind.

All the ideas of all the sensible qualities of a cherry come into my mind by sensation. Locke.

CHERRY. adj. [from the substantiv.] Resembling a cherry in colour.

Shore's wife hath a pretty foot,
A cherry lip, a pouting pleasing tongue. Shakspeare.

CHERRY-BAY. See LAUREL.

which they throw cherry stones into a small hole.

What! man, 'tis not for gravity to play at cherry-pit.
Shakspeare Twelfth Night.

CHERSONESE. n. f. [Χερσονεσος.] A peninsula; a tract of land almost surrounded by the sea, but joined to the continent by a narrow neck or isthmus.

CHERT. n. f. [from quartz, Germ.] A kind of flint.

Flint is most commonly found in form of nodules; but 'tis sometimes found in thin strata, when 'tis called chert. Woodw.

CHERUB. n. f. [כרוב plur. כרובים.] It is sometimes written in the plural, improperly, cherubim.

A celestial spirit, which, in the hierarchy, is placed next to the seraphim. All the several descriptions which the Scripture gives us of cherubim, differ from one another;
as they are described in the shapes of men, eagles, oxen, lions, and in a composition of all these figures put together. The hieroglyphical representations in the embroidery upon the curtains of the Tabernacle, were called by Moses, Ex. d. xxvi. t.
cherubim of cunning work. Calmat.

The roof o' th' chamber
With gild cherubim is fretted. Shakspeare.

Upon the fightless co-souers of the air,
Shall blow the horrid deed in every eye,
That tears shall drown the wind. Shakspeare.

Some cherub finishes what you begun,
And to a miracle improves a tune. Prior.

CHERUBICK. adj. [from cherub.] Angelick; relating to the cherubim.

Thy words
Attentive, and with more delighted ear,
No XXIV.

Divine instructor! I have heard, that when Cherubick songs by night from neighbouring hills
Aerial music fend. Milton's Par. Lost.

And on the east side of the garden place,
Where entrance up from Eden easiest climbs, Cherubick watch. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CHERUBIN. adj. [from cherub.] Angelical.

This fell whore of shame,
Hath in her more destruction than thy sword,
For all her cherubin look. Shakspeare. Timon.

CHERUVIL. n. f. [cheraphyllum, Lat.] It is an umbelliferous plant, whose leaves are divided into many segments: the petals of the flower are bifid and heart-shaped; and each flower is succeeded by two long seeds, not furrowed. The species are;
1. Garden cheruvil. 2. Wild perennial cheruvil, or cow-weed.

The first of these species is cultivated for fallads. Mittr.

To CHERUP. v. n. [from cheer; perhaps from cheer up; corrupted to cherup.] To cheer; to use a cheerful voice.

The birds
Frame to thy song their cheerful cheruping;
Or hold their peace for shame of thy sweet lays. Spenser.

CHERUP. n. f. A small vermin, that lies under stones or tiles. Skinner.

CHESS. n. f. [eches, Fr.] A nice and abstruse game, in which two sets of men are moved in opposition to each other.

This game the Persian magi did invent,
The force of Eastern wisdom too express;
From thence to busy Europeans sent,
And styl'd by modern Lombards pensive chess. Denham.

So have I seen a king on chess
(His rooks and knights withdrawn,
His queen and bishops in distress)
Shutting about, grow less and less,
With here and there a pawn. Dryden.

CHESS-APPLE. n. f. See WILD SERVICE, of which it is a species.

CHESS-BOARD. n. f. [from chess and board.] The board or table on which the game of chess is played.

And cards are dealt, and chessboards brought,
To ease the pain of coward thought. Prior.

CHESSMAN. n. f. [from chess and man.] A puppet for chess.
A company of chessmen, standing on the same squares of the chessboard where we left them: we say, they are all in the same place, or unmoved.

CHESS-PLAYER. n. f. [from chess and player.] A pannelor at chess.
Thus like a skillful chessplayer, by little and little, he draws out his men, and makes his pawns of use to his greater persons. Dryden on Dramatick Poets.

CHESSOM.

The tender chessom and mellow earth is the best, being mere mould, between the two extremes of clay and sand; especially if it be not loamy and binding. Bacon.

CHEST. n. f. [cyg, Sax. chest, Lat.]

1. A box of wood or other materials, in which things are laid up.
He will seek there, on my word: neither chest, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places. Shakspeare Merry Wives of Windsor.

But more have been by as arctic oppress,
And heaps of money crowded in the chest. Dryden.

2. A CHEST of Drawers. A case with boxes or drawers.

3. The trunk of the body, or cavity from the shoulders to the belly.

Such as have round faces, or broad chests, or shoulders, have seldom or never long necks. Brown.

He describes another by the largeness of his chest, and breadth of his shoulders. Pope's No. on the hind.

To CHEST. v. a. [from the noun.] To regulate in a chest; to hoard.

CHEST-FOUNDING. n. f. A disease in horses. It comes near to a pleurisy, or peripneumony, in a human body. Lar. Dict.

CHESTED. adj. [from chest.] Having a chest; as, broadchested, narrow-chested.

CHESTER. See CASTOR.

CHESTNUT.

CHESTNUT-TREE. n. f. [chestnoigne, Fr. castanea, Lat.]

1. The tree hath katkins, which are placed at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree. The outer coat of the fruit is very rough, and has two or three nuts included in each husk or covering. This tree was formerly in great plenty, as may be proved by the old buildings in London, which were, for the most part, of this timber; which is equal in value to the best oak, and, for many purposes, far exceeds it, particularly for making vessels for liquors; it having a property, when once thoroughly seasoned, to maintain its bulk constantly, and is not subject to shrink or swell, like other timber. Mittr.

2. The fruit of the chestnut-tree.

A woman's tongue,
That gives not half to great a blow to th' ear,
As will a chestnut in a farmer's fire. Shakspeare.

October has a basket of services, medlars and chestnuts, and fruits that ripen at the latter time. Pisc. am.

3. The name of a brown colour.

His hair is of a good colour.—

—An excellent colour : your cheffnat was ever the only colour. Shaksf. As you like it.

Mérah's long hair was glossy cheffnat brown. Cecil. Dav.

CHESTON. n. f. See PLUM, of which it is a species.

CHEVALIER. n. f. [chevalier, Fr.] A knight; a gallant strong man.

Renowned Talbot doth expect my aid;

And I am lotted by a traitor villain, Shaksf.

And cannot help the noble chevalier. Shaksf.

CHEVAUX de Frise. n. f. [Fr. The singular Cheval de Frise is seldom used.] The Friesland horse, which is a piece of timber, larger or smaller, and traversed with wooden spikes, pointed with iron, five or six feet long; used in defending a passage, stopping a breach, or making a retrenchment to stop the cavalry. It is also called a turnpike, or tourniquet.

Chambers.

CHEVEN. n. f. [chevesne, Fr.] A river fish; the same with chub.

CHEVERIL. n. f. [cheveran, Fr.] A kid; kiddleather.

A fence is but a cheveril glove to a good wit : how quickly the wrong side may be turned outward. Shaksf.

Which gifts the capacity

Of your cheveril confidence would receive,

It you might please to stretch it. Shaksf.

O, here's a wit of cheveril, that stretches from an inch narrow to an ell broad. Shaksf. Romeo and Juliet.

CHIEFISANCE. n. f. [cheviance, Fr.] Enterprise; achievement.

A word now not in use.

Fortune, the foe of famous cheviance,

Schlom, said Guyon, yields to virtue's aid,

But in her way throws mischief and mischance.

Spenser's Fairy Queen.

CHESTRON. n. f. [French.] One of the honourable ordinaries in heraldry. It represents two rafters of a house, set up as they ought to stand. Harri.

To CHEW. v. a. [ceopian, Sax. kaewen, Dutch. It is very frequently pronounced chaw, and perhaps properly.]

1. To grind with the teeth; to masticate.

If little faults, proceeding on displeasure,
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eyes,
When capital crimes, chew'd, swallowed, and digested, Appear before us. Shakspeare's Henry V.

Pacing through the forest, Shaksf.

Chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy.

'Tis pious cheat, that never suck'd the blood,

Nor chew'd the flesh of lambs. Erylen.

The vales

Descending gently, where the lowing herd

Chews verdurous pasture. Philips.

By chewing, solid aliment is divided into small parts: in a human body, there is no other instrument to perform this action but the teeth. By the action of chewing, the spittle and mucus are squeezed from the glands, and mixed with the aliment; which action, if it be long continued, will turn the aliment into a sort of chyle. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. To meditate, or ruminate in the thoughts.

While the fierce monk does at his trial stand,
He chews revenge, adjuring his offence:
Guile in his tongue, and murder in his hand,
He flabs his judge, to prove his innocence. Prior.

3. To taste without swallowing.

Heav'n's in my mouth,
As if I did but only chew its name. Shaksf.

Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested: that is, some books are to be read only in parts; others to be read, but not curiously; and some few to be read wholly, with diligence and attention. Bacon's Essays.

To CHEW. v. n. To champ upon; to ruminate.

I will with patience hear, and find a time;
'Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this. Shaksf.
Inculcate the doctrine of disobedience, and then leave the multitude to chew upon't. L'Estrange.

Old politicians chew on wisdom fast,

And blunder on in business to the last. Pope.

CHICANE. n. f. [chicane, Fr.] derived by Menage from the Spanish word chico, little.]

1. The art of protracting a contest by petty objection and artifice.

The general part of the civil law concerns not the chicanes of private cases, but the affairs and intercourse of civilized nations, grounded upon the principles of reason. Locke.

His artifices have hardly one trick left; they are at an end of all their chicanes. Arbutnot.

2. Artifice in general. This sense is only in familiar language.

Unwilling then in arms to meet,

He drove to lengthen the campaign,

And fave his forces by chicane. Prior.

To CHICANE. v. n. [chicaner, Fr.] To prolong a contest by tricks.

CHICANER. n. f. [chicanneur, Fr.] A petty sophist; a trifling disputant; a wrangler.

'Tis this the only way to distinguish the two most different things I know in the world, a logical chicaner from a man of reason. Locke on Human Understanding.

CHICANERY. n. f. [chicanerie, Fr.] Sophistry; mean art of wrangle.

His anger at his ill success, caused him to destroy the greatest part of these reports; and only to preserve such as discovered most of the chicanery and futility of the practice. Abbatot and Pope's Hist. Scri.

CHICHES. n. f. See CHICKPEAS.

CHICHLING VETCH. n. f. [chichlym, Lat.] The plants of this species produce abundance of flowers, which are very ornamental in balcon or pots of flowers to place in chimnies, and other parts of large rooms. In Germany they are cultivated, and eaten as peas, though neither so tender nor well tasted. Müller.

CHICK. } n. f. [ciccn, Sax. kicken, Dutch.]

CHICKEN. } n. f. [ciccn, Sax. kicken, Dutch.]

1. The young of a bird, particularly of a hen, or small bird.

All my pretty ones!

What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam, Shaksf. Macbeth.

At one fell swoop!

For when the shell is broke, out comes a chick. Dante.

While it is a chick, and hath no spurs, nor cannot hurt, not yet hath seen the like motion, yet he readily practiseth it. Macle's Origin of Mania.

Ev'n since she was a fen-night old they lay,

Was chaste and lumbie to her dying day;

Nor chick, nor hen, was known to disobey. Dryden.

Having the notion that one laid the egg out of which the other was hatched, I have a clear idea of the relation of dam and chick. Luft.

On rainy days alone I dine,

Upon a chick and pint of wine:

On rainy days I dine alone,

And pick my chicken to the bone. Swift.

2. A word of tenderness.

My Arick, chick, Shaksf. Tempest.

This is thy charge.

3. A term for a young girl.

Then, Chloë, shall go on to practise

Of thirty-six and thirty-eight;

I urge your trade of fennel-picking,

Your hints, that: tell is no chicken. Swift.

CHICKENHEARTED. adj. [from chicken and heart.] Cowardly;

timorous; fearful.

Now we set up for tilting in the pit,

Where 'tis agreed by bullies, chickenhearted,

To sit hit the ladies first, and then be parted. Pope's Ep. F.

The CHICKENPOX. n. f. An exanthematic disorder, so called from its being of no very great danger.

CHICKLING. n. f. [from chick.] A small chicken.

CHICKPEAS. n. f. [from chick and pea.]

It hath a papilionaceous flower, succeeded by short swelling pods, like the inflated bladder of a fish: the seeds are shaped like a ram's head. It is seldom cultivated in England, where peas will do well, which are much preferable. Müller.

CHICKWEED. n. f. [chick and weed.] The name of plant.

Green mint, or chickweed, are common appellations, and of good use, in all the hard swellings of the breast, occasioned by milk. Wifson of Tuxford.

To CHIDE. v. a. preter. chid or chode, part. chid or chidden

[chcan, Sax.]

1. To reprove; to check; to correct with words: applied to persons.

Chide him for faults, and do it reverently,

When you perceive his blood inclin'd to mirth. Shaksf.

If he do set

The very wings of reason to his heels,

And fly like chidden scurry from Jove. Shaksf.

'Tis he, that do teach your babes,

Do it with gentle means, and easy tasks;

He might have chid me so: for, in good faith,

I am a child to chiding. Shaksf. Othello.

Seylla wept.

And chid her barking waves into attention. Milton.

Above the waves as Neptune chew'd his face,

To chide the winds, and save the Trojan race. Waller.

You look, as if you item philosopher

Had just now chid you. Adelphi's Cat.

If any woman of better fashion in the parish happened to be absent from church, they were sure of a visit from him, to chide and to dine with her. Swift.

2. To drive away with reproach.

Margaret my queen, and Clifford too,

Have chid me from the battle. Shaksf.

3. To blame; to reproach: applied to things.

Winds murmur'd through the leaves your long delay,

And fountains, o'er the pabbles, chid your stay. Dryd.

I chid the folly of my thoughtless haste;

For, the work pericited, the joy was past. Prior.

To CHIDE. v. n.

1. To clamour; to scold.

What had he to do to chide at me. Shaksf. As you like it.

Next morn, betimes, the bride was missing:

The mother scream'd, the father chid,
Where can this idle wench be hid?

Swift.

2. To quarrel with.

The business of the state does him offence,

And he does chide with you.

Shaksf. Othello.

3. To make a noise.

My duty,

As doth a rock against the chiding flood,

Should the approach of this wild river break,

And stand unshaken yours.

Shaksf. Henry VIII.

CHIDER, n. f. [from chide.] A rebuker; a reprover.

Not her that chides, fir, at any hand, I pray.—

I love no chiders, fir.

Shaksf. Taming of the Shrew.

CHIEF, adj. [chief, the head, Fr.]

1. Principal; most eminent; above the rest in any respect.

They were the chief of the officers that were over Solomon's works.

The hand of the princes and rulers hath been chief in this treachery.

King, ix. 23.

Your country, chief in arms, abroad defend;

At home, with moral, arts, and laws amend.

Pope's Epist.

2. Eminent; extraordinary.

A froward man soweth strife, and a whisperer separateth

chief friends.

Proverbs, xvi. 28.

3. Capital; of the first order; that to which other parts are inferiour, or subordinate.

I came to have a good general view of the apostle's main purpose in writing the epistle, and the chief branches of his discourse wherein he prosecuted it. Luci's Pref. to St. Paul's Ep.

4. It is used by some writers in the superlative degree; but, I think, improperly: the comparative is never found.

We beseech you, bend you to remain

Here in the cheer and comfort of our eyes,

Our chiefest courtier, cousin, and our son.

Shakspeare.

Does an Edomite, the chiefest of the herdsmen.

Job, xxi. 7.

He sometimes denied admission to the chiefest officers of the army.

Clarendon.

CHIEF, n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A commander; a leader.

It pain to them

Left pain lefts to be fled? or thou than they Left hardy to endure; courageous chief!

The first in flight from pain.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

After or before were never known

Such chiefs; as each an army seem'd alone.

Dryden's Fáb.

A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod;

An honest man's the noblest work of God.

Pope.

A prudent chief not always must display

His pow'r in equal ranks, and fair array;

But with th' occasion and the place comply,

Conceal his force, may seem sometimes to fly.

Pope.

2. In CHIEF, in law. In capite, without a superior lord.

All fums demandable, either for licence of alienation to be made of lands holden in chief, or for the pardon of any such alienation already made without licence, have been stayed in the way to the hanaper. Bacon's Off. Animations.

I shall be proud to hold my dependance on you in chief, as

I do part of my small fortune in Wildshire.

Dryden.

3. In Spenser it seems to signify somewhat like achievement; a mark of distinction.

Where be the nosegays that she dight for thee?

The coloured chaplets wrought within a chief,

The knotth ruth-rings, and gilt rosemary.

Spenser.

4. In heraldry.

The chief is so called of the French word chef, the head or upper part: this possesses the upper third part of the escutcheon.

Peacham on Drawing.

CHIEFLESS, adj. [from chief.] Without a head; without a leader.

And chiefless armies doz'd out the campaign,

And navies yawn'd for orders on the main.

Dunciad.

CHIEFLY, adv. [from chief.] Principally; eminently; more than common.

Any man who will seriously consider the nature of an epic poem, what actions it describes, and what persons they are chiefly whom it informs, will find it a work full of difficulty.

Dryden's Juven. Preface.

Those parts of the kingdom, where the number and estates of the dissenters chiefly lay.

Swift.

CHIEFRIE, n. f. [from chief.] A small rent paid to the lord paramount.

They shall be well able to live upon those lands, to yield her majesty reasonable chiefries, and also give a competent maintenance unto the garrisons.

Spenser.

Would the reserved rent at this day be any more than a small chiefrie.

Swift.

CHIEFTAIN, n. f. [from chief, n. f. captain.]

1. A leader; a commander.

That forc'd their chieftain, for his safety's sake,

(Their chieftain Humber named was aright)

Unto the mighty stream him to betake,

Where he an end of battle and of life did make. Fairy Que.

2. The head of a clan.

It broke, and absolutely subdued all the lords and chieftains

of the Irishy.

Davies on Ireland.

CHIEFVANCE, n. f. [probably from chief and vance, Fr. purchase]

Traffick, in which money is extorted; as discount. Now obsolete.

There were good laws against usury, the husband use of moneney; and against unlawful chiefvances and exchanges, which is bastard usury.

Luci's Henry VII.

CHILBLAIN, n. f. [from chill, cold, and blain; Fr. blain; a sore]

seems mistaken in his etymology, or has written it wrong to serve a purpose.] Sores made by frost.

I remembered the cure of chilblains when I was a boy,

(which may be called the childrens gout) by burning at the fire.

Temple.

CHILD, n. f. in the plural CHILDREN. [child, Sax.]

1. An infant, or very young person.

In age, to with for youth is full as vain,

As for a youth to turn a child again.

Prokem.

We should no more be kinder to one child than to another, than we are kinder of one eye more than of the other. L'Espr.

The young lad must not be ventured abroad at eight or ten, for fear of what may happen to the tender child; though he then runs ten times less risque than at sixteen.

Lasce.

The stroke of death is nothing: children endure it, and the greatest cowards find it no pain. Wale's Prop. for Death.

2. One in the line of filiation, opposed to the parent.

Where children have been exposed, or taken away young, and afterwards have approached to their parents' presence, the parents, though they have not known them, have had a secret joy, or other alteration thereupon. Bacon's Natural History.

I shall see

The winged vengeance overtake such children. Shaksf.

So unexhausted her perle, sons were,

That for more child er, she had more to figure. Dryden.

He in a fruitful wife's embraces old,

A long increase of children children told. Add. Ovid's Met.

3. In the language of Scripture.

One weak in knowledge. IJa. x. 19. 1 Cor. xiii. 11.

Such as are young in grace. 1 John, ii. 13.

Such as are humble and docile. Matt. xvii. 3, 4.

The descendants of a man, how remote soever, are called children; as the children of Edom, the children of Israel.

The children of light, the children of darkness; who follow light, who remain in darkness.

The elect, the blessed, are also called the children of God.

How is he numbered among the children of God, and his lot is among the saints! W'flem, v. 5.

In the New Testament, believers are commonly called children of God.

Ye are all the children of God, by faith in Jesus Christ.

Gal. iii. 26.

4. A girl child.

Mercy on's, a beanie! a very pretty beanie!

A boy, or child, I wonder! Shaksf. Winter's Tale.

5. Any thing, the product or effect of another.

Macduff, this noble passion,

Child of integrity, hath from my soul

Wip'd the black scruples. Shaksf. Macbeth.

6. To be with CHILD. To be pregnant.

If it must stand still, let wives with child,

Pray that their burthen may not fall this day,

Least that their hopes prodigiously be cross'd. Shaksf. K. John.

7. CHILD, v. n. [from the noun.] To bring children.

The spring, the summer,

The child autumn, angry winter, change

Their wont'd liveries. Shaksf. Midsummer Night's Dream.

As to childing women, young vigorous people, after irregularities of diet, in such it begins with hemorrhages. Arbushot.

CHILDREARING, participial substantive. [from child and rear.]

The act of bearing children.

To thee,

Pains only in childrearing were foretold,

And, bringing forth, soon recompens'd with joy,

Fruit of thy womb. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The timorous and irresolute Sybil has demur'd 'till she is past childrearing.

CHILD-DIED, n. f. [from child and died.] The state of a woman bringing a child or being in labour.

The funerals of prince Arthur, and of queen Elizabeth, who died in child in the Tower. Luci's Henry VII.

Pure, as when wash'd from spot of child it daim. Par. Reg.

Yet thine, tho' poor, the pain of child doth beat. Dryden.

Let no one be actually married, 'till she has the child pillow. Spenser.

Women in child are in the case of persons wounded.

Arbushot m. Dict.

CHILD-BIRTH, n. f. [from child and birth.] Travail; labour;

the time of bringing forth; the act of bringing forth.

The

The mother of Pyrocles, shortly after her childbirth, died.

Sidney.

A kernel void of any taste, but not so of virtue, especially for women travelling in childbirth. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
In the whole sex of women, God hath decreed the shapeliest pains of childbirth; to shew, that there is no fate exempt from sorrow.

He to his wife, before the time assign'd

For childbirth came, thus bluntly spoke his mind Dryden.

CHILDLED. a. f. [from child.] Furnished with a child.

How light and portable my beam, seems now,

When that which makes me bend, makes the king bow;

He childed as I father'd. Shakspeare, King Lear.

CHILDREN'S DAY. [from child and masi.]

The day of the week, throughout the year, answering to the day on which the feast of the holy Innocents is solemnized, which weak and superstitious persons think an unlucky day.

So you talk not of hares, or such uncouth things; for that proves as ominous to the fisherman, as the beginning of a voyage on the day when children's day fell, doth to the mariner. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

CHILDHOOD. n. f. [from child; childhood, Sax.]

1. The state of infants; or, according to some, the time in which we are children.

Now I have stain'd the childhood of my joy

With blood, remov'd but little from our own. Shakspeare.

The fons of lords and gentlemen should be trained up in learning from their childhood. Spenser on Ireland.

Seldom have I ceas'd to eye

Thy infancy, thy childhood, and thy youth. Milton.

The same authority that the actions of a man have with us in our childhood, the same, in every period of life, has the practice of all whom we regard as our superiors. Rogers.

2. The time of life between infancy and puberty. Infancy and childhood demand thin, copious, nourishing aliment. A. butnot on Aliments.

3. The properties of a child.

Their love in early infancy began,

And rose as childhood ripen'd into man. Dryden's Fables.

CHILDISH. adj. [from child.]

1. Having the qualities of a child; trifling, ignorant; simple. Learning hath its infancy, when it is but beginning and almost childish; then its youth, when it is luxurious and juvenile. Bacon's Essays.

2. Becoming only children; trivial; puerile. Misdemeanors being elder by three or four years, by the difference there was taken away the occasion of childish contentions. Sidney.

The lion's whelps saw how he did bear,

And fell in rugged arms withouten childish fear. Fairy Qu.

When I was yet a child, no childish play

To me was pleasing; all my mind was set

Serious to learn and know. Paradise Regained.

The fathers looked on the worship of images as the most silly and childish thing in the world. Stillingfleet's Defence.

One that hath newly learn'd to speak and go,

Loves childish plays. Rosamund.

They have spoiled the beauty of the walls with abundance of childish sentences, that consist often in a jingle of words. Addison on Italy.

By conversation the childish humours of thy younger days might be worn out. Arbutnot's History of J. Bull.

CHILDISHLY. adv. [from childish.] In a childish trifling way; like a child.

Together with his fame their infamy was spread, who had so rashly and childishly ejected him. Hester's Preface.

It is a thick misty error, supported by some men of excellent judgment in their own professions, but childishly unskillful in any thing besides. Hayward on Edward VI.

CHILDISHNESS. n. f. [from childish.]

1. Puerility; triflingness.

The actions of childishness, and unfashionable carriage, time and age will of itself be sure to reform. Locke.

Nothing in the world could give a truer idea of the superstition, credulity, and childishness of the Roman catholic religion. Addison on Italy.

2. Harmlessness.

Speak thou, boy;

Perhaps thy childishness will move him more

Than can our reasons. Shakspeare, Ciceronius.

CHILDLESS. adj. [from child.] Without children; without offspring.

As thy sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be childless among women. Samuel, xv. 33.

A man shall fee the noblest works and foundations have proceeded from childless men; which have sought to express the images of their minds, where those of their bodies have failed: for the care of posterity is most in them that have no posterity. Bacon's Essays.

Childless thou art, childless remain: so death

Shall be deceiv'd his glut. Milton's Paradise Lost.

She can give you the reason why such a one died childless:

Spektator.

CHILDLIKE. adj. [from child and like.] Becoming or becoming a child.

Who can owe no less than childlike obedience to her that hath more than motherly care. Hester.

I thought the remnant of mine age

Should have been cherish'd by her childlike duty. Shakspeare.

CHILDRIAD. n. f. [from χίλια.] A thousand; a collection or sum containing a thousand.

We make cycles and periods of years; as decades, centuries, childiads, &c. for the use of computation in history. Heder.

CHILIA'DRON. n. f. [from χίλια.] A figure of a thousand sides.

In a man, who speaks of a chilia'dron, or a body of a thousand sides, the idea of the figure may be very confuted, though that of the number be very distinct. Locke.

CHILIPACTIVE. adj. [from chile.] That which makes chile.

Whether this be not effected by some way of corrosion, rather than any proper digestion, chilipactive mutation, or alimental conversion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CHILIPACTORY. adj. [from chile.] That which has the quality of making chile.

We should rather rely upon a chilipactory mentrum, or digestive preparation drawn from fishes or individuals, whose stomachs peculiarly dissolve lapideous bodies. Brown.

CHILIFICATION. n. f. [from chile.] The act of making chile.

Nor will we affirm that iron is indigested in the stomach of the ostrich; but we suspect this effect to proceed not from any liquid reduction, or tendency to chilification, by the power of natural heat. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CHILL. adj. [cele, Sax.]

1. Cold; that which is cold to the touch.

And all my plants I save from nightly ill,

Of noisom winds, and blasting vapours chill. Milton.

2. Cold; having the sensation of cold; shivering with cold.

My heart, and my chill veins, now freezing with despair. Race's Royal Concert.

3. Depressed; dejected; discouraged.

CHILL. n. f. [from the adjective.] Chills; cold.

I very well know one to have a fort of chill about his precordia and head. Darban's Physico-theology.

TO CHILL. v. o. [from the adjective.]

1. To make cold.

Age has not yet

So shrunk my sinews, or so chill'd my veins,

But conscious virtue in my breast remains. Dryden.

Heat burns his rise, frost chills his setting beams

And vex the world with opposite extremes. Crotch.

Each changing season does its poison bring;

Rheums chill the winter, agues blast the spring. Prior.

Now no more the drum

Provokes to arms, or trumpet's clangor shrill

Affrights the wives, or chills the virgin's blood. Philips.

3. To depress; to deject; to discourage.

Every thought on God chills the gaiety of his spirits, and awakens terrors, which he cannot bear. Rogers's Sermon.

3. To blast with cold.

The fruits perish on the ground,

Or soon decay, by snows immoderate chill'd,

By winds are blasted, or by lightning kill'd. Blackm. Crest.

CHILLINESS. n. f. [from chilly.] A sensation of shivering cold.

If the patient survives three days, the acuteness of the pain abates, and a chilliness or shivering affects the body. Arbutnot.

CHILLY. adj. [from chill.] Somewhat cold.

A chilly sweat bedews

My shudd'ring limbs. Philips.

CHILNESS. n. f. [from chill.] Coldness; want of warmth.

If you come out of the sun suddenly into a shade, there followeth a chilness or shivering in all the body. Bacon.

This, while he thinks, he lifts aloft his dart,

A generous chilness seizes ev'ry part,

The veins pour back the blood, and fortify the heart. Dryd.

CHIME. n. f. [chims, Dut.] The end of a barrel or tub.

CHIME. n. f. [The original of this word is doubtful.] Janvier and Mingrew suppose it corrupted from cimbal, Skinner from gamme, or gamut; Henshaw from chiamare, to call, because the chime calls to church. Perhaps it is only softened from chimes, or chourmes, an old word for the found of many voices, or instruments making a noise together.

1. The consonant or harmonic found of many correspondent instruments.

Hang our shaggy thighs with bells;

That, as we do strike a tune,

In our dance, shall make a chime. Ben. Jonson.

The found

Of instruments, that made melodious chime,

Was heard, of harp and organ. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Love virtue, she alone is free;

She can teach you how to climb

Higher than the sphery chime. Milton.

2. The

2. The correspondence of sound.

Love hirt invented verse, and form'd the rhyme,

The motion mesur'd, harmoniz'd the chime. Dryden.

3. The sound of bells, not rung by ropes, but struck with hammers. In this sense it is always used in the plural, chimes.
We have heard the chimes at midnight. Shaksf.

4. The correspondence of proportion or relation.

The conceptions of things are placed in their several degrees of similitude; as in several proportions, one to another: in which harmonious chimes, the voice of reason is often drowned. Greiv.

7. CHIME. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To sound in harmony or concordance.

To make the rough recital aptly chime,

Or bring the sum of Gallia's ills to rhyme,

To mighty hard.

Prior.

2. To correspond in relation or proportion.

Father and son, husband and wife, and such other correlative terms, do belong one to another; and, through custom, do readily chime, and answer one another, in people's memories. Locke.

3. To agree; to fall in with.

He not only sat quietly and heard his father railed at, but often chimed in with the discourse. Arbutnot.

4. To suit with; to agree.

Any sect, whose reasonings, interpretation, and language, I have been used to, will, of course, make all chime that way; and make another, and perhaps the genuine meaning of the author, seem harsh, strange and uncouth to me. Locke.

5. To jingle; to clatter.

But with the meaner tribe I'm forc'd to chime,

And, wanting strength to rise, descend to rhyme. Smith.

To CHIME. v. a. To move, or strike, or sound harmonically, or with just consonancy.

Withlited arms they order ev'ry blow,

And chime their sounding hammers in a row:

With labour'd anvils Æma groans below, Dryden.

2. To strike a bell with a hammer.

CHIME'RA. n. f. [Chimera, Lat.] A vain and wild fancy, as remote from reality as the existence of the poetical chimera, a monster feigned to have the head of a lion, the belly of a goat, and the tail of a dragon.

In fouth, the force of dreams is a piece,

Chimeras all; and more absurd, or less. Dryden.

No body joins the voice of a sheep with the shape of a horse, to be the complex ideas of any real substances, unless he has a mind to fill his head with chimeras, and his discourse with unintelligible words. Locke.

CHIMERICAL. adj. [from chimera.] Imaginary; fanciful; wildly, vainly, or fantastically conceived; fantastick.

Notwithstanding the fineness of this allegory may atone for it in some measure, I cannot think that persons of such a chimerical existence are proper actors in an epic poem. SpeSat.

CHIMERICALLY. adv. [from chimerical.] Vainly; wudly; fantastically.

CHIMINAGE. n. f. [from chimim, an old law word for a road.]

A toll for passage through a forest. Cowd.

CHIMNEY. n. f. [chiminee, French.]

1. The passage through which the smoke ascends from the fire in the house.

Chimnies, with scorn, rejecting smoke. Swift.

2. The turret raised above the roof of the house, for conveyance of the smoke.

Low officers, which some neighbours hardly think it worth fluting from their chimney sides to obtain. Swift.

CHIMNEY-CORNER. n. f. [from chimney and corner.] The freize; the seat on each end of the firegrate; usually noted in proverbial language for being the place of idlers.

Yet some old men

Tell stories of you in their chimney-corner. Denham.

CHIMNEYPIECE. n. f. [from chimney and piece.] The ornamental piece of wood, or stone, that is set round the fireplace.

Polish and brighten the marble hearths and chimneypieces with a clout dip't in grease; nothing maketh them thine so well. Swift.

CHIMNEYSWEEPER. n. f. [from chimney and sweeper.]

1. One whose trade it is to clean foul chimnies of soot.

To look like her, are chimneysweepers black:

And since her time are colliers counted bright. Shaksf.

The little chimneysweepers skulk along.

And marks with sooty stains the heretics' throng. Gay.

Even lying Ned the chimneysweeper of Savoy, and Tom the Portugall duffman, put in their claims. Arb.

2. Is used proverbially for one of a mean and vile occupation.

Nº. XXIV.

Golden lads and girls, all must,

As chimneysweepers, come to dust.

CHIN. n. f. [chine, Sax. china, Germ.] The part of the face beneath the under lip.

But all the words I could get of her, was wrying her wrist, and thrusting out her chin. Slaney.

With his amazonian chin he drove

The bristled lip, b-fore him.

He rais'd his hardy head, which sunk again,

And, sinking on his bosom, knock'd his chin. De den.

CHINA. n. f. [from China, the country where it is made.] China ware; porcelain; a species of vessel made in China, dimly transparent, partaking of the qualities of earth and glass. They are made by mingling two kinds of earth, of which one easily vitrifies; the other relists a very strong heat: when the vitrifiable earth is melted into glass, they are completely burnt.

Spicen, vapours, or small pox, above them all,

And misfires of herself, tho' china fall. Pope.

After supper, carry your place and china together in the same basket. Swift.

CHINA-ORANGE. n. f. [from China and orange.] The china orange; supposed originally of China.

Not many years has the China-orange been propagated in Portugal and Spain.

CHINA-ROOT. n. f. [from China and root.] A medicinal root, brought originally from China. Morimer.

CHINCOUGH. n. f. [chings more properly kinough, from kinden, to pant, Dut. and cough.] A violent and convulsive cough, to which children are subject.

I have observed a chin-cough, complicated with an intermitting fever. Fis or on the Humours.

CHINE. n. f. [chine, Fr. china, Ital. china, Lat. cin, Arm.]

1. The part of the back, in which the spine or backbone is found.

She strike him such a blow upon his chine, that she ordered all his body.

He presents her with the tusk's head,

And chine, with rising bruises roughly spread. Dryden.

2. A piece of the back of an animal.

Cut out the burly boned clown in chines of beef ere thou sleep. Shakspeare.

He had killed eight fat hogs for this season, and he had dealt about his chines very liberally amongst his neighbours. SpeSat.

And Atwill's self was drain'd of all his hoards. Swift.

CHINKY. adj. [from chink.] Full of holes; gaping; opening into narrow clefts.

But plaster thou the chinky hives with clay. Dryden.

Grimalkin, to domestick vermin sworn

An everlasting foe, with watchful eye

Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap,

Protending her fell claws, to thoughtless mice

Sure ruin. Philips.

CHINTS. n. f. Cloath of cotton made in India, and printed with colours.

Let a charming chint, and Brussels lace,

Wrap my cold limbs, and shade my lifeless face. Pope.

CHIOPPINE. n. f. [from chopin, Span.] A high shoe, formerly worn by ladies.

Your ladyship is nearer heaven than when I saw you last,

by the altitude of a chippine. Shakspeare.

The woman was a giantess, and yet walked always in chippines. Crowley.

CHIP, CHEAP, CHIPPING, in the names of places, imply a market; from the Sax cýpan, ceapan, to buy. Giles.

To CHIP. v. a. [probably corrupted from chip.] To cut into small pieces; to diminish, by cutting away a little at a time.

To return to our statue in the block of marble, we see it sometimes

sometimes only begun to be chipped; sometimes rough hewn, and just sketched into an human figure. Addison.

The critic strikes out all that is not just;
And 'tis ev'n to the butcher chips his crutt. King's Cookery.

Taught him to chip the wood, and hew the stone. Thomf.
CHIP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A small piece taken off by a cutting instrument.
Cucumbers do extremely affect moisture, and over-drink themselves, which chaff or chips forbiddeeth. Bacon.
That chip made the iron swim, not by any natural power.
Taylor's Weekly Communicant.

The straw was laid below:
Of chips and ferewood was the second row. Dryden.

2. A small piece, however made.

CHIPPING n. f. [from to chip.] A fragment cut off.
They dung their land with the chippings of a sort of soft stone. Motimur.

The chippings and filings of these jewels, could they be preserved, are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authors. Fulton on the Clocks.

CHIRAGRICAL adj. [chiragra, Lat.] Having the gout in the hand; subject to the gout in the hand.

Chiragri alwayms do suffer in the finger as well as in the rest, and sometimes fist of all. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
CHIROGRAPHER n. f. [χίρ, the hand, and γράφω, to write] He that exercises or professes the art or business of writing.

Thus passeth it from this office to the chirographer, to be engrossed. Bacon.

CHIROGRAPHER n. f. [See CHIROGRAPHER.] This word is used in the following passage, I think improperly, for one that tells fortunes, by examining the hand: the true word is chirophysist, or chiromaner.

Let the physiognomists examine his features; let the chirophysists behold his palm; but, above all, let us consult for the calculation of his nativity. Arbutnot.

CHIROGRAPHY n. f. [See CHIROGRAPHER.] The art of writing.

CHIROMANER n. f. [See CHIROMANER.] One that foretells future events by inspecting the hand.

The middle fort, who have not much to spare,
To chiromaners cheaper zit repair,
Who clap the pretty palm, to make the lines more fair. Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. vi.

CHIROMANCY n. f. [χίρ, the hand, and μανία, a prophet.] The art of foretelling the events of life, by inspecting the hand.

There is not much considerable in that doctrine of chiromancy, that fests in the top of the nails do signify things past; in the middle, things present; and at the bottom, events to come. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO CHIRP v. n. [perhaps contracted from cheer up.] To make a cheerful noise; as birds, when they call without singing.

She chirping ran, her peeping flew away,
'Till hard by them both he and she did lay.
Came he right now to sing a raven's note;
And thinks he, that the chirping of a wren
Can chase away the first conceived found. Shakespeare.

No chirping lack the welkin thence invokes.
The careful hen

Calls all her chirping family around. Thomson.
TO CHIRP v. a. [This seems apparently corrupted from cheer up.] To make cheerful.

Let no sober bigot here think it a sin,
To push on the chirping and moderate bottle. Johnson.
Sir Balaam now, he lives like other folks;
He takes his chirping pint, he cracks his jokes.

CHIRP [from the verb.] The voice of birds or insects.
Winds over us whisper'd, flocks by us did bleat,
And chirp went the grasshopper under our feet. Spenser.

CHIRPER n. f. [from chirp.] One that chirps; one that is cheerful.

TO CHIRRE v. n. [ecceyan, Sax.] See CHURME.
To coo as a pigeon.

CHIRURGEON n. f. [χίρουργός, from χίρ, the hand, and εργον, work.] One that cures ailments, not by internal medicines, but outward applications. It is now generally pronounced, and by many written, surgeon.

When a man's wounds cease to smart, only because he has lost his feeling, they are nevertheless mortal, for his not feeling his need of a chirurgion. South.

CHIRURGERY n. f. [from chirurgion.] The art of curing by external applications.

Gynecia having skill in chirurgery, an art in those days much esteemed. Sidney.

Nature could do nothing in her case without the help of chirurgery, in drying up the luxurious flesh, and making way to pull out the rotten bones. Hijeman.

CHIRURGICAL adj. See CHIRURGEON.

CHIRURGEON n. f. See CHIRURGEON.

3. Manual in general, confining in operations of the hand. This sense, though the first, according to etymology, is now scarce found.

The chirurgial or manual, doth refer to the making instruments, and exercising particular experiments. Waller.

CHISEL n. f. [scissus, i. e. of scissum, Lat.] An instrument with which wood or stone is pared away.

What fine chisel
Could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mock me,
For I will kiss her.

There is such a seeming softness in the limbs, as if not a chisel had hewed them out of stone, but a pencil had drawn and stroked them in oil. Waller.

Imperfect flaps: in marble such are seen,
When the rude chisel does the man begin. Dryden.

TO CHISEL v. a. [from the noun.] To cut with a chisel.
CHIT n. f. [according to Dr. Hickeys, from chid, Germ. chid, perhaps from chis, little, Span.]

And by this light
Did all the chivalry of England move
To do brave acts. Shakespeare.

6. In law.
Servitium militare, of the French, chevalier; a tenure of land by knights service. There is no land but is holden mediately or immediately of the crown, by some service or other; and therefore are all our freeholds, that are to us and our heirs, called feuds, fees, as proceeding from the benefit of the king. As the king gave to the nobles large possessions for this or that rent and service, so they parcelled out their lands, so received, for rents and services as they thought good; and those services are by Littleton divided into chivalry and socage. The one is martial and military; the other, elowish and rustic. Chivalry, therefore, is a tenure of service, whereby the tenant is bound to perform some noble or military office unto his lord, and is of two sorts; either regal, that is, such as may hold only of the king; or such as may also hold of a common person as well as of the king. That which may hold only of the king is properly called ferageantry, and is again divided into grand or petty, i. e. great or small. Chivalry that may hold of a common person, as well as of the king, is called scutagium. Couch.

7. It ought properly to be written chevalry. It is a word not much used, but in old poems or romances.

CHOICE. n. f. [choix, French.]

1. The act of choosing; determination between different things proposed; election.

If you oblige me suddenly to chuse,
The choice is made; for I must both refuse. Dryden.

Soft elocution doth thy style renown,
Gentle or sharp, according to thy choice,
To laugh at follies, or to lash at vice. Dryden.

2. The power of choosing; election.

Choice there is not, unless the thing which we take to be so in our power, that we might have refused it. If fire consume the stubble, it chooseth not to do so, because the nature thereof is such that it can do no other. Hooker.

There's no liberty like the freedom of having it at my own choice, whether I will live to the world, or to myself. Lucan.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice. Whereas all moral goodness consisteth in the elective act of the understanding will. Greus.

Whether he will remove his contemplation from one idea to another, is many times in his choice. Locke.

3. Care in choosing; curiosity of distinction.

Julius Cæsar had a collection of apophthegms; it is pity his book is lost; for I imagine they were collected with judgment and choice. Bacon.

4. The thing chosen; the thing taken or approved, in preference to others.

Your choice is not so rich in birth as beauty:
That you might well enjoy her. Shakespeare.

Take to thee, from among the cherubim,
Thy choice of flaming war-ours. Milton.

Now Mars, the God, let fame exalt her voice;
Nor let thy conquests only be her choice. Prior.

5. The best part of any thing, that is more properly the object of choice.

The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the psalms do both more briefly contain, and more movingly also express. Hobbes.

Thou art a mighty prince: in the choice of our sepulchres bury thy dead. Gen. xxiii. 6.

Of many provinces, from bound to bound. Milton.

Wisdom, of what herself approves, makes choice,
Nor is let captive by the common voice. Denham.

CHOICE. adj. [choisy, French.]

1. Select; of extraordinary value.

After having set before the king the choicest of wines and fruits, told him the best part of his entertainment was to come. Guarigan.

Thus in a sea of folly lost'd,
My choicest hours of life are lost. Spenser.

2. Chary; frugal; careful. Used of persons.

He that is choicest of his time, will also be choicest of his company, and choicest of his actions. Taylor's Holy Living.

CHOICELESS. adj. [from choice.] Without the power of choosing; without right of choice; not free.

Neither the weight of the matter, of which the cylinder is made, nor the round valuable form of it, are any more imputable to that dead choiceless creature, than the first motion of it was supposed to be; and, therefore, it cannot be a fit resemblance to shew the reconcilableness of fate with choice. Hammond on Fundamenta's.

CHOICEFULLY. adv. [from choice.]

1. Curiously; with exact choice.

A band of men,
Collected choicefully from each county some. Shakespeare.

You must make the mould big enough to contain the whole fruit, when it is grown to the greatest; for else you will choke the spreading of the fruit. Bacon.

The fire, which choke'd in ashes lay,
A load too heavy for his soul to move,
Was upward blown below, and brush'd away by love. Dryden.

4. To suppress.

And yet we ventur'd; for the gain propos'd
Choke'd the respect of likely peril fear'd. Shakespeare.

Confess these freely of thy sin:
For to deny each article with oath,
Cannot remove nor choke the strong conception
That I do groan withal. Shakespeare.

5. To overpower; to suppress.

And that which fell among thorns are they, which, when they have heard, go forth, and are choke'd with cares, and riches, and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection. Luke, viii. 14.

No fruitful crop the sickly fields return;
But oats and dandel choke the rising corn. Dryden.

Marfilus Ficinus increases these proportions, adding two more of pure choler. Written on Education.

There would be a main defect, if such a feeding animal, and so subject unto diseases from bilious causes, should want a proper conveyance for choler. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. The humour, which, by its superabundance, is supposed to produce irascibility.

It engenders choler, planteth anger;
And better 'twere that both of us did fast,
Since, of ourselves, ourselves are choleric,
Than feed it with such over-roasted flesh. Shakespeare.

3. Anger; rage.

Put him to choler straight: he hath been used
Ever to conquer, and to have his word
Of contradiction. Shakespeare.
He, methinks, is no great scholar,
Who can mistake desire for choler. Priv.

CHOLERICK. adj. [cholericus, Latin]

1. Abounding with cholera.

The choule or crop, adhering unto the lower side of the bill, and so depending by the throat, is a bag or saccul. Br. F. Nat. Er.

TO CHOUSE, v. a. [The original of this word is much doubted by Etienne, who tries to deduce it from the French gesser, to lugh at; or jeubier, to wheedle; and from the Leutonic

N° XXIV.

jesen, to prattle. It is perhaps a fortuitous and cant word, without etymology.]

1. To cheat; to trick; to impose upon.

Freedom and zeal have chous'd you o'er and o'er;

Pray give us leave to bubble you once more. Dryden.

From London they came, silly people to chouse,

Their lands and their faces unknown. Swift.

2. It has of before the thing taken away by fraud.

When geese and pullets are seduc'd,

And fows of sucking pigs are chous'd. Hudibras.

A CHOUSE, n. f. [from the verb. This word is derived by Henry from haus, or chaus, a messenger of the Turkish court; who, says he, is little better than a fish.]

1. A bubble; a tool; a man fit to be cheated.

A foolish chouse,

Who, when a thief has robb'd his house,

Applies himself to cunning men. Hudibras.

2. A trick or sham.

TO CHO'WTER, v. n. To grumble or mutter like a froward child. Philips.

CHRISM, n. f. [χρισμα, an ointment.] Unguent; or unction: it is only applied to sacred ceremonies.

One act never to be repeated, is not the thing that Christ's eternal priesthood, devoted especially by his unction or *chris*m, refers to. Hammond.

CHRISM, n. f. [See CHRISM.] A child that dies within a month after its birth. So called from the *chris*m-cloth, a cloth anointed with holy unguent, which the children anciently wore till they were christened.

When the convulsions were but few, the number of *chris*ms and infants was greater. Graunt.

TO CHRIS'EN, adj. [chrysenian, Sax.]

1. To baptize; to initiate into christianity by water.

2. To name; to denominate.

Where such evils as these reign, *chris*ten the thing what you will, it can be no better than a mock millennium. Burnet.

CHRISTENDOM, n. f. [from Christ and dom.] The collective body of christianity; the regions of which the inhabitants profess the christian religion.

What hath been done, the parts of Christendom most afflicted can best testify. Hesler.

An older and a better soldier, none

That Christendom gives out. Shakspeare.

His computation is universally received over all Christendom. Hilder.

CHRISTENING, n. f. [from the verb.] The ceremony of the first initiation into christianity.

The queen was with great solemnity crowned at Westminster, about two years after the marriage; like an old christening, that had had long for godfathers. Bacon.

We shall infer the causes, why the account of christenings hath been neglected more than that of burials. Graunt.

The day of the christening being come, the house was filled with gossip. Ardenbush and Pope's Mort. Scriverius.

CHRISTIAN, n. f. [Christianus, Lat.] A professor of the religion of Christ.

We christians have certainly the best and the holiest, the wisest and most reasonable religion in the world. Tillotson.

CHRISTIAN, adj. Professing the religion of Christ.

I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,

To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield

To christian intercessors. Shakspeare.

A CHRISTMAS-BOX, n. f. [from christmas and box.] A box in which little presents are collected at Christmas.

When time comes round, a Christmas-box they bear,

And one day makes them rich for all the year. Gay.

CHRISTMAS-FLOWER, n. f. See SKELLERORE.

CHRIST'S-THORN, n. f. [So called, as Skeller fancies, because the thorns have some likeness to a cross.]

It hath long sharp spines: the flower has five leaves, in form of a rose: out of the flower-cup, which is divided into several segments, rises the point, which becomes a fruit, shaped like a bonnet, having a shell almost globular, which is divided into three cells, in each of which is contained a roundish seed. This is by many persons supposed to be the plant from which our Saviour's crown of thorns was composed. Miller.

CHROMATICK. adj. [χρῶμα, colour.]

1. Relating to colour.
 I am now come to the third part of painting, which is called the chromatick, or colouring. Dryden.

2. Relating to a certain species of ancient music, now unknown.

CHRONICAL. } adj. [χρόνος, time.]

CHRONICK. }
 A chronical distemper is of length; as dropsies, asthma's, and the like. Quincy.

Of diseases some are chronical, and of long duration; as quartan agues, fevers, &c. wherein we defer the cure unto more advantageous seasons. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The lady's use of all these excellencies is to divert the old man, when he is out of the pangs of a chronical distemper. Spectator.

CHRONICLE. n. f. [chronique, Fr. from χρόνος, time.]

1. A register or account of events in order of time.

No more yet of this;
 For 'tis a chronicle of day by day, Shakespeare.
 Not a relation for a breakfast.

2. A history.
 You lean too confidently on those Irish chronicles, which are most fabulous and forged. Spenser.

If from the field I should return once more,
 I and my sword will earn my chronicle. Shakespeare.

I'm traduced by tongues, which neither knows
 My faculties nor person, yet will be
 The chronicles of my doing. Shakespeare.

I give up to historians the generals and heroes which crowd their annals, together with those which you are to produce for the British chronicle. Dryden.

CHRONICLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To record in chronicle, or history.
 'This to rehearse, should rather be to chronicle times than to search into reformation of abuses in that realm. Spenser.

2. To register; to record.
 For now the devil, that told me I did well,
 Says that this deed is chronicled in hell. Shakespeare.

Love is your master; for he masters you:
 And he that is so yoked by a fool,
 Methinks, should not be chronicled for wife. Shakespeare.

I shall be the jest of the town; nay, in two days I expect to be chronicled in ditty, and sung in woeful ballad. Congreve.

CHRONICLER. n. f. [from chronicle.]

1. A writer of chronicles; a recorder of events in order of time.
 Here gathering chroniclers, and by them stand
 Giddy fantastick poets of each land. Dwene.

2. A historian; one that keeps up the memory of things past.
 I do herein rely upon these bards, or Irish chroniclers. Spens.
 This custom was held by the druids and bards of our ancient Britons, and of later times by the Irish chroniclers, called rimer. Raleigh.

CHRONOGRAM. n. f. [χρόνος, time, and γράφω, to write.] An inscription including the date of any action.

Of this kind the following is an example:
 Gloria lausque Deo, facLot'M in teeX'la funt.

A chronogrammatical verse, which includes not only this year 1660, but numeral letters enough to reach above a thousand years further, until the year 2867. Husw.

CHRONOGRAMMATICAL. adj. [from chronogram.] Belonging to a chronogram. See the last example.

CHRONOGRAMMATIST. n. f. [from chronogram.] A writer of chronograms.

There are foreign universities, where, as you praise a man in England for being an excellent philosopher or poet, it is an ordinary character to be a great chronogrammatist. Addison.

CHRONOLOGER. n. f. [χρόνος, time, and λόγος, doctrine.] One that studies or explains the science of computing past time, or of ranging past events according to their proper years.

Chronologers differ among themselves about most great epochs. Hilder.

CHRONOLOGICAL. adj. [from chronology.] Relating to the doctrine of time.

Thus much touching the chronological account of some times and things past, without confining myself to the exactness of years. Hale.

CHRONOLOGICALLY. adv. [from chronological.] In a chronological manner; according to the laws or rules of chronology;
 according to the exact series of time.

CHRONOLOGIST. n. f. [See CHRONOLOGER.] One that studies or explains time; one that ranges past events according to the order of time; a chronologer.

According to these chronologists, the prophecy of the Rabin that the world should last but six thousand years, has been long disproved. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

All that learned noise and dust of the chronologists is wholly to be avoided.

CHRONOLOGY. n. f. [χρόνος, time, and λόγος, doctrine.] The science of computing and adjusting the periods of time; as the revolution of the sun and moon; and of computing time past, and referring each event to the proper year.

And the measure of the year not being so perfectly known to the ancients, rendered it very difficult for them to transmit a true chronology to succeeding ages. Hilder.

Where I allude to the customs of the Greeks, I believe I may be justified by the strictest chronology; though a poet is not obliged to the rules that confine an historian. Prior.

A CHRONOMETER. n. f. [χρόνος and μέτρον.] An instrument for the exact measurement of time.

According to observation made with a pendulum chronome-ter, a bullet, at its first discharge, flies five hundred and ten yards in five half seconds. Darwin.

CHURCH. n. f. [ceipe, Sax. kirika.] The collective body of christians, usually termed the catholic church.

The church being a supernatural society, doth differ from natural societies in this; that the persons upon whom we associate ourselves in the one, are men, simply considered as men; but they to whom we be joined in the other, are God, angels, and holy men.

1. The body of christians adhering to one particular opinion, or form of worship.

The church is a religious assembly, or the large fair building where they meet; and sometimes the same word means a synod of bishops, or of presbyters; and in some places it is the pope and a general council.

2. The place which christians consecrate to the worship of God.

That churches were consecrated unto none but the Lord only, the very general name chiefly doth sufficiently shew: church doth signify no other thing than the Lord's house.

Against the church.

4. It is used frequently in conjunction with other words; as church-member, the member of a church; church-power, spiritual or ecclesiastical authority.

5. CHURCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To perform with any one the office of returning thanks in the church, after any signal deliverance, as from the danger of childbirth.

CHURCH-ALB. n. f. [from church and alb.] A wake, or scarf, commemorative of the dedication of the church.

For the church albs, two young men of the parish are yearly chosen to be wardens, who make collection among the parishioners of what provision it pleaseth them to bestow.

CHURCH-ATTIRE. n. f. The habit in which men officiate at divine service.

These and such like were their discourses, touching that church-attire, which with us for the most part is used in public prayer.

CHURCH-AUTHORITY. n. f. Ecclesiastical power; spiritual jurisdiction.

In this point of church-authority, I have listed all the little scraps alleged.

CHURCH-BURIAL. n. f. Burial according to the rites of the church.

The bishop has the care of seeing that all christians, after their deaths, be not denied church-burial, according to the usage and custom of the place.

CHURCH-FOUNDER. n. f. He that builds or endows a church.

Whether emperors or bishops in those days were church-founders, the solemn dedication of churches they thought not to be a work in itself either vain or superfluous.

CHURCHMAN. n. f. [church and man.] 1. An ecclesiastic; a clergyman; one that ministers in sacred things.

If any thing be offered to you touching the church and churchmen, or church-government, rely not only upon yourself.

A very difficult work to do, to reform and reduce a church into order, that had been to long neglected, and that was so filled by many weak and more wilful churchmen.

Patience in want, and poverty of mind, These marks of church and churchmen he design'd.

And living taught, and dying lie behind.

2. An adherent to the church of England.

CHURCH-WARDENS. n. f. [See WARDEN.] Are officers yearly chosen, by the consent of the minister and parishioners, according to the custom of each place, to look to the church, church-yard, and such things as belong to both; and to observe the behaviour of the parishioners, for such faults as appertain to the jurisdiction or censure of the ecclesiastical court. They are a kind of corporation, enabled by law to sue for any thing belonging to their church, or poor of their parish.

These should likewise church-wardens, of the gravest men in the parish, be appointed, as they be here in England.

Our church-wardens Feast on the silver, and give us the farthings.

CHURCHYARD. n. f. The ground adjoining to the church, in which the dead are buried; a cemetery.

I am almost afraid to stand alone Here in the church-yard, yet I will adventure.

In churchyards, where they bury much, the earth will consume the corpse in far shorter time than other earth will.

No place so sacred from such fops is barr'd; Nor is Paul's church more safe than Paul's churchyard.

CHURL. n. f. [cevel, Sax. carl, in German, is strong, rusticks being always observed to be strong bodied.]

CIMETER. n. f. [cimiteria, Span. and Portug. from cimenter, Turkish. Bliss's Portuguese Dictionary.] A sort of sword used by the Turks; short, heavy, and recurved or bent backward. This word is sometimes erroneously spelt simiter, and cymeter; as in the following examples.

By this cimeter,
That flew the guy and a Persian prince,

That won three fields of fulan Solymann. Shakspeare.

Our armours now may roll, our idle cymeters

Hang by our sides for ornament, not use. Dryden.

CINCTURE. n. f. [cinctura, Latin.]

1. Something worn round the body.

Now happy he, whose cloak and cincture

Hold out this tempest. Shakspeare.

Columbus found the American so girt

With feather'd cincture, naked else, and wild. Milton.

He binds the sacred cincture round his breast. Pope.

2. An inclosure.

The court and prison being within the cincture of one wall.

Bacon's Henry VII.

3. [In architecture.] A ring or list at the top and bottom of the shaft of a column; separating the shaft at one end from the base, at the other from the capital. It is supposed to be in imitation of the girths or ferrils anciently used, to strengthen and preserve the primitive wood-columna. Chambers.

CINDER. n. f. [cindere, Fr. from cinderet, Lat.]

1. A mass ignited and quenched, without being reduced to ashes.

I should make very forges of my checks,

That would to cinders burn up modesty, Shakspeare.

Did but I speak thy deeds.

There is in smiths cinders, by some adhesion of iron, sometimes to be found a magnetical operation. Brown's Vul. Err.

So snow on Aetna does unmeltd lie,

Whose rolling flames and scatter'd cinders fly. Waller.

2. A hot coal that has ceased to flame.

If from adown the hopeful chops

The fat upon a cinder drops,

To flinking (smoke it turns the flame. Swift.

CINDER-WENCH. } n. f. [cinder and wench.] A woman

CINDER-WOMAN. } whose trade is to rake in heaps of ashes for cinders.

'Tis under so much nasty rubbish laid,

To find it out's the cinder-woman's trade. Essay on Satire.

She had above five hundred suits of fine cloaths, and yet went abroad like a cinder-wench. Arbutnot.

In the black form of cinder-wench she came,

When love, the hour, the place had banish'd flame. Gay.

CINERATION. n. f. [from cineret, Lat.] The reduction of any thing by fire to ashes. A term of chymistry.

CISERITION.

CINERITIOUS, adj. [cinericius, Lat.] Having the form or state of ashes.

Clypeus Philosophi ad Principes.

CINERULENT, adj. [from cineris, Lat.] Full of ashes. Dict.

CINGULE, n. f. [from cingulum, Lat.] A girth for a horse. Dict.

CINNABAR, n. f. [cinnabaris, Latin.] Cinnabar is native or factitious: the factitious cinnabar is called vermillion.

Cinnabar is the ore out of which quicksilver is drawn, and consists partly of a mercurial, and partly of a sulphureo-ochreous matter.

The particles of mercury uniting with the particles of sulphur, compose cinnabar.

CINNABAR of Antimony, is made of mercury, sulphur, and crude antimony.

CINNAMON, n. f. [cinnamomum, Lat.] The fragrant bark of a low tree in the island of Ceylon, possessed by the Dutch, in the East Indies. Its leaves resemble those of the olive, both as to substance and colour. The fruit resembles an acorn or olive, and has neither the smell nor taste of the bark. When boiled in water, it yields an oil, which as it cools and hardens, becomes as firm and white as tallow; the smell of which is agreeable in candles. The trees are chiefly propagated by a sort of pigeons which feed on the fruit, and, carrying it to their young, drop it where it takes root. Cinnamon is chiefly used in medicine as an astringent. The cinnamon of the ancients was different from ours.

Let Araby extol her happy coast,
Her cinnamon and sweet anamum boast.

CINNAMON Water is made by distilling the bark, first infused in barley water, in spirit of wine or white wine.

CINQUE, n. f. [Fr.] A Five. It is used in games alone; but is often compounded with other words.

CINQUE-FOUL, n. f. [cinque feuille, Fr.] A kind of five-leaved clover.

CINQUE-PACE, n. f. [cinque pas, Fr.] A kind of grave dance. Wooing, wedding, and repenting is a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinque pace. The first foot is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding, mannerly and modest, as a measure, full of state and gravity; and then comes repentance, and, with his bad leg, falls into the cinque pas faster and faster, 'till he sinks into his grave.

CINQUE PORTS, n. f. [cinque ports, Fr.] Those havens that lie towards France, and therefore have been thought by our kings to be such as ought most vigilantly to be observed against invasion. In which respect, the places where they are have a special government or keeper, called by his office Lord Warden of the cinque ports; and divers privileges granted to them, as a particular jurisdiction, their warden having the authority of an admiral among them, and sending out writs in his own name. The cinque ports are Dover, Sandwich, Rye, Hastings, Winchelsea, Romney, and Hith; some of which, as the number exceeds five, must either be added to the first institution by some later grant, or accounted as appendages to some of the rest.

They, that bear
The cloth of state above her, are four barons of the cinque ports.

CIRQUE-SPOTTED, adj. Having five spots. On her left breast
A mole cinque spotted, like crimson drops
I th' bottom of a cowslip.

CITON, n. f. [fin, or fin, Fr.]
1. A sprout; a shoot from a plant.

We have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal fings, our unbitted lusts; whereof I take this that you call love, to be a fe or cin.

The stately Caledonian oak, newly settled in his triumphant throne, begirt with cin of his own royal stem.

2. The shoot engrafted or inserted on a stock.

The cin over-rulth the stock quite; and the stock is but passive only, and giveth aliment, but no motion to the graft.

CIPHER, n. f. [chifre, Fr. zifra, Ital. cifra, low Lat. from an oriental root.]

1. An arithmetical character, by which some number is noted; a figure.

2. An arithmetical mark, which, standing for nothing itself, increases the value of the other figures.

Mine were the very cipher of a function,
To find the faults, whose fine fluids in record,
And let go by the actor.

If the people be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or ciphers in the privation or translation. Bar.

As, in accounts, ciphers and figures pass for real sums, so names pass for things.

3. An intertexture of letters engraven usually on boxes or plates.

Troy flam'd in burnish'd gold; and o'er the throne,
Arms and the man in golden ciphers throned.

Some mingling fir the melted tar, and some
N XXV.

Deep on the new-thorn vagrant's heaving side,
To stamp the matter's cipher, ready dash.

4. A character in general.

In succeeding times this wisdom began to be written in ciphers and characters, and letters bearing the signs of creatures.

5. A secret or occult manner of writing, or the key to it.

This book, as long liv'd as the elements,
In cipher writ, or new made idioms.

He was pleas'd to command me to stay at London, to send and receive all his letters; and I was furnish'd with nine several ciphers, in order to it.

To CIPHER, v. n. [from the noun.] To practise arithmetick.

You have been bred to business; you can cipher: I wonder you never us'd your pen and ink.

To CIPHER, v. a. To write in occult characters.

He frequented sermons, and pious notes: his notes he ciphered with Greek characters.

To CIRCINATE, v. a. [circin, Lat.] To make a circle, to compass round, or turn round.

CIRCINATION, n. f. [circinatio, Lat.] An orbicular motion; a turning round; a measuring with the compasses.

CIRCLE, n. f. [circulus, Latin.]

1. A line continued 'till it ends where it begun, having all its parts equidistant from a common center.

Any thing, that moves round about in a circle, in less time than our ideas are wont to succeed one another in our minds, is not perceived to move; but seems to be a perfect intire circle of that matter, or colour, and not a part of a circle in motion.

Then a deeper still,
In circle following circle gathers sound
To close the face of things.

2. The space included in a circular line.

3. A round body; an orb.

It is he that sitteth upon the circle of the earth.

4. Compass; inclosure.

A great magician,
Obscured in the circle of the fowl.

5. An assembly surrounding the principal person.

To have a box where churchmen sing,
And, foremost in the circle, eye a king.

6. A company; an assembly.

I will call over to him the whole circle of beauties that are disposed among the boxes.

Ever since that time, Lifander visits in every circle.

7. Any series ending as it begins, and perpetually repeated.

There be divers fruit-trees in the hot countries, which have blossoms and young fruit, and young fruit and ripe fruit, almost all the year, succeeding one another; but this circle of ripening cannot be but in fucculent plants, and hot countries.

Thus in a circle runs the peasant's pain,
And the year rolls within itself again.

8. An inconclusive form of argument, in which the foregoing proposition is proved by the following, and the following proposition inferred from the foregoing.

That heavy bodies descend by gravity; and again, that gravity is a quality whereby an heavy body descends, is an impertinent circle, and teacheth nothing.

That fallacy called a circle, is when one of the premisses in a syllogism is questioned and opposed, and we intend to prove it by the conclusion.

9. Circumlocution; indirect form of words.

Has he given the lie
In circle or oblique, or knecircle,
Or direct parallel? You must challenge him.

10. CIRCLES of the German Empire. Such provinces and principalities as have a right to be present at diets. They are in number ten.

To CIRCLE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To move round any thing.

The lords that were appointed to circle the hill, had some days before-planted themselves in places convenient.

Another Cynthia her new journey runs,
And other planets circle other funs.

2. To inclose; to surround.

What stern ungentle hands
Have lop'd and hew'd, and made thy body bare
Of her two branches, those sweet ornaments,
Whole circling shadows kings have fought to sleep in.

While these fond arms, thus circling you, may prove
More heavy chains than those of hopeles love.

Unseen, he glided thro' the joyous crowd,
With darkness circled, and an ambient cloud.

3. To CIRCLE in. To confine; to keep together.

We term those things dry which have a consistence within themselves, and which, to enjoy a determinate figure, do not require the stop or hindrance of another body to limit and circle them in.

To CIRCLE, v. n. To move circularly; to end where it begins.

4 O The

- The well fraught bowl
Circles incessant, whilst the humble cell
 With quavering laugh, and rural jests, resounds. Philips.
 Now the circling years disclose
 The day predestin'd to reward his woes. Pope.
CIRCLED, adj. [from circle.] Having the form of a circle; round.
 Th' incessant moon,
 That monthly changes in her circled orb. Shakspeare.
CIRCLET, n. f. [from circle.] A circle; an orb.
 Then take repast, 'till Hesperus display'd
 His golden circles in the western shade. Pope.
CIRCLING, participial adj. [from To circle.] Having the form of a circle; circular; round.
 Round he surveys, and well might, where he stood
 So high above the circling canopy
 Of night's extended shade. Milton.
CIRCUI, n. f. [circuit, Fr. circuitus, Latin.]
 1. The act of moving round any thing.
 The circuits, in former times, went but round about the pale; as the circuit of the cynosura about the pole. Davies.
 There are four moons about perpetually rolling round the planet Jupiter, and carried along with him in his periodical circuit round the sun. Watts.
 The space inclosed in a circle.
 He led me up
 A woody mountain, whose high top was plain
 A circuit wide inclos'd. Milton.
 3. Space; extent; measured by travelling round.
 He attributeth unto it smallness, in respect of circuit. Hesb.
 The lake of Bolsena is reckoned one and twenty miles in circuit. Addison.
 4. A ring; a diadem; that by which any thing is incircled.
 And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage,
 Until the golden circuit on my head.
 Do calm the fury of this mad-brain'd flaw. Shakspeare.
 5. The visitations of the judges for holding assizes.
 6. The tract of country visited by the judges.
 7. CIRCUIT of Action. In law, is a longer course of proceeding to recover the thing sued for than is usual. Covel.
To CIRCUIT, v. n. [from the noun.] To move circularly.
 Pining with equinoctial heat, unless
 The cordial cup perpetual motion keep,
 Quick circuiting. Philips.
CIRCUITER, n. f. [from circuit.] One that travels a circuit.
 Like your fellow circuiter the sun: you travel the round of the earth, and behold all the iniquities under the heavens. Pope.
CIRCULATION, n. f. [circulatio, Lat.]
 1. The act of going round any thing.
 2. Compals; maze of argument; comprehension.
 To apprehend by what degrees they lean to things in show, though not indeed repugnant one to another, requireth more sharpness of wit, more intricate circulations of discourse, and depth of judgment, than common ability doth yield. Hesb.
CIRCULAR, adj. [circulatus, Latin.]
 1. Round, like a circle; circumscribed by a circle.
 The frame thereof seem'd partly circular,
 And part triangular. Fairy Queen.
 He first inclos'd for lifts a level ground;
 The form was circular. Dryden.
 Nero's port, compos'd of huge moles running round it,
 in a kind of circular figure. Addison.
 2. Successive in order; always returning.
 From whence th' innumerable race of things,
 By circular successive order springs. Roscommon.
 3. Vulgar; mean; circumforaneous.
 Had Virgil been a circular poet, and closely adhered to history, how could the Romans have had Dido? Dennis.
 4. CIRCULAR Letter. A letter directed to several persons, who have the same interest in some common affair; as in the convocation of assemblies.
 5. CIRCULAR Lines. Such straight lines as are divided from the divisions made in the arch of a circle; as the lines of fines, tangents, and secants on the plain scale and sector.
 6. CIRCULAR Sailing, is that performed on the arch of a great circle.
CIRCULARITY, n. f. [from circular.] A circular form.
 The heavens have no diversity or difference, but a simplicity of parts, and equiformity in motion, continually succeeding each other; so that, from what point soever we compute, the account will be common unto the whole circularity. Brown.
CIRCULARLY, adj. [from circular.]
 1. In form of a circle.
 The internal form of it consists of several regions, involving one another like orbs about the same centre, or of the several elements act circularly about each other. Burnet.
 2. With a circular motion.
 Trade, which, like blood, should circularly flow,
 Stopp'd in their channels, found its freedom lost. Dryden.
 Every body moved circularly about any center, recede, or endeavour to recede, from the center of its motion. Ray.
To CIRCLATE, v. n. [from circulus.] To move in a circle; to run round; to return to the place whence it departed in a constant course.

If our lives motions theirs must imitate,
 Our knowledge, like our blood, must circulate. Desham.
 Nature is a perpetual motion; and the work of the universe circulates without any interval or repose. L'Estrange.
 In the civil wars, the money spent on both sides was circu- lated at home; no publick debts contracted. Sargt.

To CIRCLATE, v. a. To put about.

CIRCULATION, n. f. [from circulatio.]
 1. Motion in a circle; a course in which the motion tends to the point from which it began.

What more obvious, one would think, than the circulation of the blood, unknown 'till the last age? Burnet.

As much blood passeth through the lungs as through all the rest of the body: the circulation is quicker, and heat greater, and their texture extremely delicate. Hesb.

2. A series in which the same order is always observed, and things always return to the same state.

As for the fins of peace, thou hast brought upon us the miseries of war; so for the fins of war, thou hast led us to us the blessing of peace, and to keep us in a circulation of miseries. K. Charles.

God, by the ordinary rule of nature, permits this continual circulation of human things. Sufft.

3. A reciprocal interchange of meaning.

When the apostle saith of the Jews, that they crucified the Lord of glory; and when the son of man, being on earth, affirmeth that the son of man was in heaven at the same instant, there is in these two speeches that mutual circulation before mentioned. Hesb.

CIRCULATORY, n. f. [from circulate.] A chymical vessel, in which that which rises from the vessel on the fire, is cooled and cooled in another fixed upon it, and falls down again.

CIRCULATORY, n. f. [from circulate.] Circulatory letters are the same with CIRCULAR Letters.

CIRCUMAMBIENT, n. f. [from circumambiens.] The act of encircling.

Ice receiveth its figure according unto the surface whereat it concreteth, or the circumambient, which conformat it.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CIRCUMAMBIENT, adj. [circum and ambis, Latin.] Surrounding; encompassing; inclosing.

The circumambient coldness towards the sides of the vessel, like the second region, cooling and condensing of it. Bliss.

 strengthen their routed party by a reinforcement from the circum- sciss.

CIRCUMCISION, n. f. [from circumcidere.] The rite or act of cutting off the foreskin.

They left a race behind
 Like to themselves, distinguishable scarce
 From Gentiles, but by circumcision vain. Milton.

To CIRCUINDUCT, v. a. [circumducere, Lat.] To convey; to nullify.

Acts of judicature may be cancelled and circumducted by the will and direction of the judge; as also by the content of the parties litigant, before the judge has pronounced and given sentence. Argjff's Parergon.

CIRCUMDUCTION, n. f. [from circumducere.]
 1. Nullification; cancellation.

The citation may be circumducted, though the defendant should not appear; and the defendant must be cited, as a circum- duction requires. Argjff's Parergon.

2. A leading about.

CIRCUMFERENCE, n. f. [circumference, Latin.]
 1. The periphery; the line including and surrounding any thing.

Extend thus far thy bounds,
 This be thy just circumference. O world! Milton.
 Because the hero is the center of the main action, all the lines from the circumference tend to him alone. Dryden.

A coal of fire, moved nimbly in the circumference of a circle, makes the whole circumference appear like a circle of fire.
Newton's Optics.

2. The space inclosed in a circle.

So was his will
 Pronounc'd among the gods, and by an oath,
 That shook heav'n's whole circumference, confirm'd. Add.

He first inclos'd for lifts a level ground,
 The whole circumference a mile around. Dryden.

3. The external part of an orbicular body.

The bubble, being looked on by the light of the clouds reflected from it, seem'd red as its apparent circumference.
 If the clouds were viewed through it, the colour at its circum- ference would be blue. Newton.

4. An orb; a circle; any thing circular or orbicular.

His pond'rous shield, large and round,
Behind him cast; the broad circumference
Hung on his shoulders like the moon. Milton.
CIRCUMFERENCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To include in a circular space.

Nor is the vigour of this great body included only in itself, or circumfered by its surface; but diffused at indeterminate distances. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CIRCUMFERENTOR. n. f. [from circumfero, Lat. to carry about.] An instrument used in surveying, for measuring angles, consisting of a brass circle, an index with sights, and a compass, and mounted on a staff, with a ball and socket. Chambers.

CIRCUMFLEX. n. f. [circumflexus, Lat.] An accent used to regulate the pronunciation of syllables, including or participating the acute and grave.

The circumflex keeps the voice in a middle tune, and therefore in the Latin is compounded of both the other. Holder.

CIRCUMFLUENCE. n. f. [from circumfluens.] An inclosure of waters.

CIRCUMFLUENT. adj. [circumfluens, Lat.] Flowing round any thing.

which falls into his own cistern, that must relieve him. South.

2. A reservoir; an inclosed fountain.

Had no part as kindly fluid behind,

In the wide cistern of the lakes confid'd;

Did not the springs and rivers drench the land,

Our globe would grow a wilderness of sand. Blackmore.

3. Any watery receptacle or repository.

So half my Egypt were submerged, and made

A cistern for kal'd snakes. Shakespeare.

But there's no bottom; none

In my voluptuousness; your wives, your daughters,

Your matrons and your maids, could not fill up

The cistern of my lust. Shakespeare.

CISTUS. n. f. [Lat.] The name of a plant. The same with Rockrose.

CIT. n. f. [contracted from citizen.] An inhabitant of a city, in an ill sense. A pert low townsmen; a pragmatical tradesman. We bring you now to show what different things,

The city or cloven are from the courts of kings. Johnson.

Study your race, or the foil of your family will dwindle into citi or quicks, or run up into wit or madness. Tatler.

Barnard, thou art a citi, with all thy worth;

But Bug and D—1, thy honours, and so forth. Pope.

CITADEL. n. f. [citadelle, French.] A fortress; a castle, or place of arms in a city.

CITRINE. n. f. [from citrinus, Latin.]

A species of crystal of an extremely pure, clear, and fine texture, generally free from flaws and blemishes. It is ever found in a long and slender column, irregularly hexangular, and terminated by an hexangular pyramid. It is from one to four or five inches in length. These crystals are of an extremely beautiful yellow, differing in degrees from that of a strong ochre colour to that of the peel of a lemon; and they have a very elegant brightness and transparency. This stone is very plentiful in the West Indies. Our jewellers have learned from the French and Italians to call it citrine; and often cut stones for rings out of it, which are generally mistaken for topazes. Hill.

CITRON-TREE. n. f. [from citrus, Latin.]

It hath broad stiff leaves, like those of the laurel. The flowers consist of many leaves, expanded like a rose; the cup of the flower is slender and fleshy, and is divided into five segments at the top. The pistil becomes an oblong, thick, N^o XXV.

Belly fruit, which is very full of juice, and contains several hard seeds. Genoa is the great nursery of Europe for these sorts of trees. One sort, with a pointed fruit, is in so great esteem, that the single fruits are sold at Florence for two shillings each. This fruit is not to be had in perfection in any part of Italy, but the plain between Pisa and Leghorn. Milner.

May the sun
With citron groves adorn a distant soil. Adams.

CIVET. n. f. [civette, Fr. zibetta, Arabic, signifying scint.] A perfume from the civet cat.

The civet, or civet cat, is a little animal, not unlike our cat, excepting that his snout is more pointed, his claws less dangerous, and his cry different. It is a native of the Indies, Peru, Brazil, Guinea. The perfume is formed like a kind of grease, or thick scum, in an aperture or bag under its tail, between the anus and pudendum. It is gathered from time to time, and abounds in proportion as the animal is fed. It is much used by perfumers and confectioners; but seldom profited in medicine. Trevoux.

Civet is of a baser birth than tar: the very uncleanly flux of a cat.

He rubs himself with civet: can you smell him out by that? Shakspeare.

Some putrefactions and excrements do yield excellent odours; as civet and musk, and, as some think, ambergrace. Bacon.

CIVICK. adj. [civicus, Latin.] Relating to civil honours or practices; not military.

With equal rays immortal Tully shone:
Behind, Rome's genius waits with civick crowns,
And the great father of his country owns. Pope.

CIVIL. adj. [civilis, Latin.]

1. Relating to the community; political; relating to the city or government.

God gave them laws of civil regimen, and would not permit their commonwealth to be governed by any other laws than his own. Hosker.

Part such as appertain
To civil justice; part, religious rites Milton.

Of sacrifice.

But there is another unity, which would be most advantageous to our country; and that is your endeavour after a civil, a political union in the whole nation. Spratt.

2. Relating to any man as a member of a community.

Break not your promise, unless it be unlawful or impossible; either out of your natural, or out of your civil power. Taylor.

3. Not in anarchy; not wild; not without rule or government.

For rudest minds with harmony were taught,
And civil life was by the muses taught. Rafsomman.

From a civil war, God of his mercy defend us, as that which is most desperate of all others. Bacon.

5. Not ecclesiastical; as, the ecclesiastical courts are controlled by the civil.

6. Not natural; as, a person banished or outlawed is said to suffer civil, though not natural death.

7. Not military; as, the civil magistrates authority is obstructed by war.

8. Not criminal; as, this is a civil process, not a criminal prosecution.

9. Civilized; not barbarous.

England was very rude and barbarous, for it is but even the other day since England grew civil. Spenser.
10. Complaisant; civilised; gentle; well bred; elegant of manners; not rude; not brutal; not coarse.

I heard a mermaid, on a dolphin's back,
Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civil at her song. Shakespeare.
He was civil and well natured, never refusing to teach another. Dryden.

And fall these sayings from that gentle tongue,
Where civil speech and soft persuasion hung. Prior.
11. Grave; sober; not gay or showy.
Thus night oft see me in thy pale career,
'Till civil suited morn appear. Milton.
12. Relating to the ancient consular or imperial government;
13. civil law. Shakespeare.

No woman had it, but a civil doctor. Shakespeare.
CIVILIAN, n. f. [civilis, Lat.] One that professes the knowledge of the old Roman law, and of general equity.
The professors of that law, called civilians, because the civil law is their guide, should not be discountenanced nor discouraged. Bacon.

A depending kingdom is a term of art, unknown to all ancient civilians, and writers upon government. Swift.
CIVILISATION, n. f. [from civil].
A law, act of justice, or judgment, which renders a criminal process civil; which is performed by turning an information into an inquest, or the contrary. Harris.

CIVILITY, n. f. [from civil].
1. Freedom from barbarity; the state of being civilised.
The English were at first as stout and warlike a people as ever the Irish; and yet are now brought unto that civility, that no nation in the world excelleth them in all goodly conversation, and all the floodings of knowledge and humanity. Spenser.

Divers great monarchies have risen from barbarism to civility, and fallen again to ruin. Danbom.

Wherefore'er her conquering eagles fled,
Arts, learnings, and civility were spread.
2. Politeness; complaisance; elegance of behaviour.
Art thou thus bolden'd, man, by thy disreits;
Or else a rude despatch of good manners,
That in civility thou seem'st to enquire? Shakespeare.
He, by his great civility and affability, wrought very much upon the people. Clarendon.

I should be kept from a publication, did not what you civility calls a request, your greatness, command. South.
He, in point of civility, yield to others in our own houses. Swift.

3. Rule of decency; practice of politeness.
Love taught him shame; and shame, with love at strife,
Soon taught the sweet civilities of life. Dryden.
To CIVILIZE, v. a. [from civil]. To reclaim from savage-ness and brutality; to instruct in the arts of regular life.

We send the graces and the muses forth,
To civilize and to instruct the North. Waller.
Muses first, then Orpheus civilize
Mankind, and gave the world their duties. Danbom.
Amongst those who are counted the civilized part of mankind, this original law of nature still takes place. Locke.
Others, or the Bacchus of the antients, is reported to have civilized the Indians, and reigned amongst them fifty-two years. Arbutnot.

CIVILIZER, n. f. [from civilize]. He that reclaims others from a wild and savage life; he that teaches the rules and customs of civility.

The civilizers!—the disturbers, say;—
The robbers, the corrupters of mankind!
Proud vagabonds! Philips.

CIVILLY, adv. [from civil].

1. In a manner relating to government, or to the rights or character of a member of a community; not naturally; not ecclesiastically; not criminally.

Men that are civil lead their lives after one common law;
for that a multitude should, without harmony amongst themselves, concur in the doing of one thing; for this is civilly to live; or should manage community of life, it is not possible.
Hesker.

That accusation, which is publick, is either civilly commenced for the private satisfaction of the party injured; or else criminally, that is, for some publick punishment. Ayliffe.

2. Politely; complaisantly; gently; without rudeness; without brutality.

I will deal civilly with his poems: nothing ill is to be spoken of the dead. Dryden.

I would have had Almeria and Osmyn parted civilly; as if it was not proper for lovers to do so. Calder.

He thought them folks that lost their way,
And said they civilly to slay. Prior.

3. Without gay or gaudy colours.
The chambers were handsome and cheerful, and furnished civilly. Bacon.

CIZE, n. f. [perhaps from in isis, Lat. shaped or cut to a certain magnitude.] The quantity of any thing, with regard to its external form; often written size.

If no motion can alter bodies, that is, reduce them to some other size or figure, then there is none of itself to give them the size and figure which they have. Grav.

CLACK, n. f. [klatschen, German, to rattle; to make a noise.]
1. Any thing that makes a lasting and importunate noise; generally used, in contempt, for the tongue.

But fill his tongue ran on,
And with its everlasting clack,
Sets all mens ears upon the rack. Hudibras.
Fancy flows in, and music flies high;
He knows not when my clack will lie. Prior.

2. The CLACK of a Mill. A bell that rings when more corn is required to be put in.

Says John, just at the hopper will I stand,
And mark the clack how justly it will found. Betterton.

Beyond
The flow'ry dale of Sibma, clad with vine. Milnes.

But virtue too, as well as vice, is clad
In flesh and blood. Waller.

To her the weeping heav'ns become serene;
For her the ground is clad in cheerful green. Dryden.

The courtiers were all most magnificently clad. Swift.

To CLAIM, v. a. [clamer, French.] To demand of right; to require authoritatively; not to beg or accept as favour, but to exact as due.

If only one man hath a divine right to obedience, no body can claim that obedience but he that can shew his right. Locke.
We must know how the first ruler, from whom any one claims, came by his authority, before we can know who has a right to succeed him in it. Locke.

Poets have undoubtedly right to claim,
If not the greatest, the most lasting name. Congreve.

CLAIM, n. f. [from verb].

1. A demand of any thing, as due.

You, in the right of lady Blanch your wife,
May then make all the claim that Arthur did. Shakespeare.

Forsworn thyself! The traitor's odious name
I feel return, and then disprove thy claim. Dryden.

Will he not, therefore, of the two evils chuse the least, by submitting to a master, who hath no immediate claim upon him, rather than to another, who hath already revived several claims upon him? Swift.

2. A title to any privilege or possession in the hands of another.

Either there must have been but one sovereign over them all, or else every father of a family had been as good a prince, and had as good a claim to royalty as these. Locke.

3. In law.

A demand of any thing that is in the possession of another, or at the least out of his own: as claim by charter, claim by descent. Cowd.

4. The phrases are commonly to make claim, or to lay claim.
The king of Prussia lays in his claim for Neuf-Châtel, as he did for the principality of Orange. Adair.

If God, by his positive grant, gave dominion to any man, primogeniture can lay no claim to it, unless God so ordered. Locke.

CLAIMABLE, adj. [from claim]. That which may be demanded as due.

CLAIMANT, n. f. [from claim]. He that demands any thing as unjustly detained by another.

A CLAIMER, n. f. [from claim]. He that makes a demand;
he that requires any thing, as unjustly withheld from him.

CLAIR-OBSCURE, n. f. See CLARF-OBSCURE.

To CLAMBER, v. n. [probably corrupted from climb; as climber, clamber.] To climb with difficulty, as with bad hands and feet.

The kitchen malkin pins
Her richest lockram 'bout her reechy neck,
Clambering the walls to eye him. Shakespeare.

When you hear the drum,
Clamber not you up to the cements then. Shakespeare.

The men there do not without some difficulty clamber up the acclivities, dragging their kine with them. Rus.

They were forced to clamber over so many rocks, and so tread upon the brink of so many precipices, that they were very often in danger of their lives. Adair.

To CLAMM, v. a. [in some provinces, to clam, from clamm,
Sax. to glew together.] To clog with any glutinous matter.

A swarm of wasps got into a honey-pot, and there they clayd.

clowed and clommed themselves, 'till there was no getting out again. L'Estrange.

the cliew-garnet.

Harris.

CLICK. v. n. [clicken, Dut. cliquet, French.] To make a sharp, small, successive noise.

The solemn death-watch click'd, the hour sic dy'd;

And thrilling crickets in the chimney cry'd.

Gay.

CLICKER. n. f. [from click.] A low word for the servant of a waiter, who stands at the door to invite customers.

CLICKER. n. f. [from click.] The knocker of a door.

Skinner.

CLIPENT. n. f. [clien, Latin.]

1. One who applies to an advocate for counsel and defence.

There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation, where causes are well handled; for that upholds in the clien the reputation of his counsel.

Bacon.

Advocates must deal plainly with their *clien*s, and tell the true tale of their case.

Taylor.

2. It may be perhaps sometimes used for a dependant in a more general sense.

I do think they are your friends and *clien*s,

And fearful to disturb you.

Ben. Johnson.

CLIENTED. partip. adj. [from clien.] Supplied with clients.

This due occasion of discouragement, the worst conditioned and least *clien*ted pettivogues, do yet, under the sweet bit of revenge, convert to a more plentiful prosecution of actions.

Cervus's Survey of Cornwall.

CLIENTEL. n. f. [clientela, Lat.] The condition or office of a client. A word scarcely used.

There's Varus holds good quarters with him;

And, under the pretext of *clien*tel,

Will be admitted.

Ben. Johnson.

CLIENTSHIP. n. f. [from clien.] The condition of a client.

Patronage and *clien*ship among the Romans always degraded; the plebeian houses had recourse to the patrician line which had formerly protected them.

Dryden.

CLIFT. n. f. [clivus, Lat. clif; clay, Saxon.]

1. A steep rock; a rock, according to Skinner, broken and craggy.

N. XXV.

The Leucadians did use to precipitate a man from a high cliff into the sea.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Mountaineers, that from Severus came,

And from the craggy cliffs of Ictrica.

Dryden.

Where-ever 'tis to found scattered upon the shores, there is it as constantly found lodged in the cliffs thereabouts.

2. The name of a character in mulick. Properly CLIFT.

CLIFT. n. f. The same with CLIFF, now disused.

Down he tumbled, like an aged tree;

High growing on the top of rocky cliff.

Spenser.

CLIMACTIC. n. f. [κλιμακία.] A certain space of time, or progression of years, which is supposed to end in a critical and dangerous time.

Elder times, settling their conceits upon climacters, differ from one another.

Brown.

CLIMACTIC. } adj. [from climacter.] Containing a cer-

CLIMACTICAL. } tain number of years, at the end of which some great change is supposed to befall the body.

Certain observable years are supposed to be attended with some considerable change in the body; as the seventh year;

the twenty-first, made up of three times seven; the forty-ninth, made up of seven times seven; the sixty-third, being nine times seven; and the eighty-first, which is nine times nine: which two last are called the grand climactericks.

The numbers seven and nine, multiplied into themselves, do make up sixty-three, commonly esteemed the grand climacteri-

cal of our lives.

Brown's Vulgar Errata.

Your lordship being now arrived at your great climacterique, yet give no proof of the least decay of your excellent judgment and comprehension.

Dryden.

My mother is something better, tho' at her advanced age,

every day is a climacterick.

Pope.

CLIMATE. n. f. [κλίμα.]

1. A space upon the surface of the earth, measured from the equator to the polar circles; in each of which spaces the longest day is half an hour longer than in that nearer to the equator. From the polar circles to the poles climates are measured by the increase of a month.

2. In the common and popular sense, a region, or tract of land, differing from another by the temperature of the air.

Between th' extremes, two happier climates hold

The temper that partakes of hot and cold.

Dryden.

On what new happy climate are we thrown?

This talent of moving the passions cannot be of any great use in the northern climate.

Swift.

To CLIMATE. v. n. To inhabit. A word only in Shakspeare.

The blessed gods

Purge all infection from our air, whilst you

Do climate here.

Shakspeare.

CLIMATE. n. f. The same with climate, and not in use.

Such harbingers preceding still the fates,

Have heav'n and earth together demonstrated

Unto our climates and countreys.

Shakspeare.

CLIMAX. n. f. [κλίμαξ.] Gradation; ascent; a figure in rhetorick, by which the sentence rises gradually; as Cicero says to Catiline, 'Thou dost nothing, movest nothing, thinkest nothing; but I hear it, I see it, and perfectly understand it.

Choice between one excellency and another is difficult;

and yet the conclusion, by a due climax, is evermore the best.

Dryden's Juvenal.

Some radiant Richmond every age has grac'd,

Still rising in a climax, 'till the last,

Surpassing all, is not to be surpass'd.

Granville.

To CLIMB. v. n. pret. clomb or climbed; part. clomb or climbed.

It is pronounced like clime. [*clim*an, Sax. klimmen, Dutch.]

To ascend up any place; to mount by means of some hold or footing. It implies labour and difficulty, and successive efforts.

You tempt the fury of my three attendants,

Lean famine, quivering steel, and climbing fire.

Shakspeare.

Things, at the worst, will cease; or else climb upward

To what they were before.

Shakspeare.

Jonathan climbed up upon his hands, and upon his feet. 1 Sa.

Thou fun! of this great world both eye and soul,

Acknowledge him thy greater; found his praise

In thy eternal course, both when thou climbst,

And when high noon hath gain'd, and when thou fall'st.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

No rebel Titan's sacrilegious crime,

By heaping hills on hills, can thither climb.

Reverend.

Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day.

Dryden.

What controuling cause

Makes waters, in contempt of nature's laws,

Climb up, and gain th' aspiring mountain's height.

To CLIMB. v. a. To ascend.

When shall I come to th' top of that same hill?

—You do climb up it now. Look, how we labour.

Shakspeare.

Is't not enough to break into my garden,

Climbing my walls, in spite of me the owner?

Shakspeare.

The arms pursue

Paths of renown, and climb ascents of fame.

Prior.

Forlorn he must, and persecuted fly;

Climb the steep mountain, in the cavern lie.

Prior.

CLIMBER.

CLIMBER. n. f. [from climb.]

1. One that mounts or scales any place or thing; a mounter; a risher.

I wait not at the lawyer's gates,
Ne shoulder climbers down the stairs.

Corcoran.

2. A plant that creeps upon other supports.
Ivy, briony, honey-suckles, and other climbers, must be dug up.

Motmeyer.

3. The name of a particular herb.
It hath a perennial fibro-fib root: the leaves grow opposite in the stalks. The flowers, mostly of four leaves, placed in form of a cross, are naked, having no calyx: in the point of the flower are many hairy filamina surrounding the pistil, of which becomes a fruit; in which the seeds are gathered into a little head, ending in a kind of rough plume; whence it is called by the country people old man's beard. The species are twelve, two of which grow wild.

Miller.

CLIMATE. n. f. [contracted from clinate, and therefore properly political.] Climate; region; tract of earth.

He can spread thy name o'er land and seas,
Whatever came the sun's bright circle warms.

Milton.

They apply the celestial description of other climates unto their own.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Of beauty sung, her shining progress view,
From clime to clime the dazzling light pursue.

Granville.

We shall meet
In happier climes, and on a safer shore.

Addison.

Health to vigorous bodies, or fruitful seasons, in temperate climates, are common and familiar blessings.

Atterbury.

CLINCH. v. a. [clinging, Sax. to knock, Junius. Cling, in Fetus, to encumbers, Alphonsus.]

1. To hold in the hand with the fingers bent over it.

Sinuous rows the bodies and the shields
Of heroes, whose dismember'd hands yet bear

Dryden.

2. To contract or double the fingers.

Their tallest trees are about seven feet high, the tops whereof I could but just reach with my fist clinked.

Swift.

3. To bend the point of a nail in the other side.

To confirm; to fix; as, to clinch an argument.

CLINCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A word used in a double meaning; a pun; an ambiguity; a dupli city of meaning, with an identity of expression.

Such as they are, I hope they will prove, without a clinch,
Luciferus, teaching after the nature of light.

Boyle.

Pure clinch the suburban muse abhors,
And Tauton waging harmless wars with words.

Dryden.

Here one poor word a hundred clinch makes.

Pope.

2. That part of the cable which is fastened to the ring of the anchor.

CLINCHER. n. f. [from clinch.] A cram; a holdfast; a piece of iron bent down to fasten planks.

The wimbles for the work, Calypso found;
With those he pierc'd 'em, and with clinchers bound.

Pope.

TO CLING. v. n. pres. I cling; part. I have clung. [Anger, Danish.]

1. To hang upon by twining round; to stick to; to hold fast upon.

The broil long doubtful stood;
As two spent swimmers that co cling together,

Shakespeare.

And chok'd their art.

Most popular counsel he is grown, methinks:
How the rout cling to him!

Ben. Jonson.

The fortrel in his neck was defcried by the clinging of his hair to the plaiter.

H. Lyman.

When they united and together clung,

When undistinguish'd in one heap they hung.

Blackmore.

See in the circle, next Eliza plac'd,
Two babes of love, close clinging to her waist.

Pope.

I hat they may the closer cling,

Take your blue ribbon for a string.

Swift.

2. To dry up; to consume; to waste; to pine away. [Declension clings, a withered tree.]

If thou speakest false,
Upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive,

Shakespeare.

I'll famine cling thee.

CLINGY. adj. [from cling.] Apt to cling; adhesive.

CLINTAL. adj. [clivus, to lie down.] Those that keep their CLINTICK. } beds; those that are sick, past hopes of recovery.

A clinical convert, one that is converted on his death-bed.

This word occurs often in the works of Taylor.

TO CLINK. v. a. [perhaps softened from clank, or corrupted from clack.] To strike so as to make a small sharp noise.

Five years! a long lease for the clinking of pewter.

Shakspeare.

TO CLINK. v. n. To utter a small, sharp, interrupted noise.

The fever'd bars,
Submissive, clink against your brazen portals.

Prior.

Underneath th' umbrella's oily shed,
Safe thro' the wet on clinking pattens tread.

Gay.

CLINK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A sharp successive noise; a knocking.

I heard the clink and fall of swords

Shakespeare.

2. It seems in Spenser to have some unusual sense

Thou creeping clink, behind the wicket's clink,
Privily he peeped out thro' a chink.

CLINGQUANT. n. f. [Fr.] Embroidery; spangles; false glitter; unfeeling finery.

To day the French,
All clinging, all in gold, like lea hen gods,
Shone down the English.

Shakespeare.

TO CLIP. v. a. [clippan, Saxon.]

1. To embrace, by throwing the arms round; to hug; to envelop in the arms.

He, that before shunn'd her, to shun such harms,
Now runs and takes her in his clipping arms.

Here I clip

The anvil of my sword, and do contest
Hotly, and nobly, with thy love.

O nation, that thou couldst remove!

Thou Neptune's arms, who clippeth thee about.

Enter the city, clip your wives; your friends,
Tall them your tears.

The jades

That drag the tragic melancholy night,
Who with their drowly, slow, and flagging wings,
Clip dead mens graves.

The male reiteth on the back of the female, clipping and embracing her with his leers about the neck and body.

2. To cut with shears. [Klyper, Danish; clippen, Dutch; apparently from the same radical sense, since sheers cut by enclosing and embracing.]

Your sheers come too late to clip the bird's wings, that already is flown away.

Then let him, that my love shall blame,
Or clip love's wings, or quench love's flame.

He clips hope's wings, whose airy bliss
Much higher than frustration is.

But love had clipp'd his wings, and cut him short,
Confin'd within the purlieus of his court.

If mankind had had wings, as perhaps some extravagant atheist may think us deficient in that, all the world must have consented to clip them.

By this lock, this sacred lock I swear,
Which never more shall join its parted hair,
Clipp'd from the lovely head, where late it grew.

He spent every day ten hours dozing, clipping pipes, or darning his stockings.

3. Sometimes with ey.

We should then have as much feeling upon the clipping of a hair, as the cutting of a nerve.

4. It is particularly used of those who diminish coin, by paring the edges.

This design of new coinage, is just of the nature of clipping.

5. To curtail; to cut short.

All my reports go with the modest truth,
Nor more, nor clip, but so.

Mrs. Mayores clipp'd the king's English.

Even in London, they clip their words after one manner about the court, another in the city, and a third in the suburbs.

6. To confine; to hold; to contain.

Where is he living, clips in with the sea,

Who calls me pupil?

TO CLIP. v. n. A phrase in falconry.

Some falcon floops at what her eye design'd,
And with her eagerness the quarry mis'd.

Straight flies at check, and clips it down the wind.

CLIPPER. n. f. [from clip.] One that debases coin by cutting.

It is no English treason to cut
French crowns, and to-morrow the king
Himself will be a clipper.

No coins please fine metal! As more than those which had passed through the hands of an old Roman clipper.

CLIPPING. n. f. [from clip.] The part cut or clipped off.

Beings purely mental, without sense, perception, or thought, as the clippings of our beards, and parings of cut nails.

CLIPPER. n. f. An herb. More properly written clavver.

It grows wild, the seeds sticking to the clothes of such as pass by them. It is used sometimes in medicine.

A CLOAK. n. f. [clach, Saxon.]

1. The outer garment, with which the rest are covered.

You may bear it,
Under a cloak that is of any length.

Their cloaks were cloth of silver, mix'd with gold.

All arguments will be as little able to prevail, as the wind did with the traveller to part with his cloak, which he held only the fatter.

Nimble he rose, and cast his garment down;

That instant in his cloak I wrapt me round.

2. A concealment; a cover.

Not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness.

1 Pt.
To

75 CLOAK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with a cloak.
2. To hide; to conceal.

Moll leav'n'y fair, in deed and view,
She by creation was, 'till the di'l fall;

'T'hauncefult she fought for helps to cloak her crimes wical.

CLOAKBAO. n. f. [from cloak and bag.] A portmanteau; a bag in which cloaks are carried.

Why do'st thou converse with that trunk of humours, that stuffed cloakbag of guts.

I have already fit
'Tis in my cloakbag doubtit, hat, hose, all
That answer to them.

CLOCK. n. f. [clac, Welsh, from clach, a bell, Welch and Armoric; cluck, French.]

1. The instrument which, by a series of mechanical movements, tells the hour by a stroke upon a bell.

If a man be in sickness or pain, the time will seem longer without a clock or hour-glass than with it.

The picture of Jerome usually described at his study, is with a clock hanging by.

2. It is an usual expression to say, What is it of the clock, for What hour is it? Or ten o'clock, for the tenth hour.

— Upon the stroke of four.

Macious set forward about ten o'clock in the night, towards Andrulla.

About nine of the clock at night the king marched out of the North-port.

3. The clock of a flocking; the flowers or inverted work about the ankle.

His flockings with silver clocks were ravished from him.

CLOCK is also the name of an insect; a sort of beetle.

CLOCKMAKER. n. f. [clock and make.] An artificer whose profession is to make clocks.

This inequality has been diligently observed by several of our ingenious clockmakers, and equations been made and used by them.

CLOCKWORK. n. f. [clock and work.] Movements by weights or springs, like those of a clock.

So it unprejudic'd you scan
The goings of this clockwork, man;

You find a hundred movements made
By fine devices in his head:

But 'tis the stomach's solid stroke,
That tells its being, what's a clock.

Within this hollow was Vulcan's shop, full of fire and clockwork.

You look like a puppet moved by clockwork.

CLOD. n. f. [clous, Sax. a little hillock; clotte, Dutch.]

1. A lump of earth or clay; such a body of earth as cleaves or hangs together.

The earth that casteth up from the plough a great clod, is not so good as that which casteth up a smaller clod.

I'll cut up, as plows
Do barren lands, and strike together flints

And clods, th' ungrateful fenate and the people.

Who smooths with harrows, or who pounds with rakes
The crumbling clods.

2. A turf; the ground.

Byzantians boast, that on the clod,
Where once their sultan's horse has trod,

Grows neither grass, nor shrub, nor tree.

3. Any thing vile, base, and earthy; as the body of man, compared to his soul.

And ye high heav'n's, the temple of the gods,
In which a thousand torches, flaming bright,
Do burn, that to us wretched earthly clods,
In dreadful darkness, lend desired light.

The spirit of man,
Which God inspir'd, cannot together perish
With this corporeal clod.

How the purer spirit is united to this clod, is a knot too hard for our degraded intellects to untie.

In moral reflections there must be heat as well as dry reason, to inspire this cold clod of clay, which we carry about with us.

4. A dull, gross, stupid fellow; a dolt.

The vulgar! a scarce an mated clod,
Ne'er pleas'd with aught above 'em.

To CLOD. v. n. [from the noun.] To gather into concretions;
to coagulate; for this we sometimes use clot.

Let us go find the body, and from the stream,
With javers purce, and cleansing herbs, wash off
The clotted gore.

To CLOD. v. a. [from the noun.] To pelt with clods.

CLODDY. adj. [from clod.] 1. Consisting of earth or clods; earthy; muddy; miry; mean;
gross; base.

The glorious sun,
Turning, with splendour of his precious eye,
The meagre cloddy earth to glittering gold.

2. Full of clods unbroken.

These lands they sow always under furrow about Michaelmas, and leave it as cloddy as they can.

CLODFATE. n. f. [clod and fate.] A stupid fellow; a dolt; a thickfellow.

CLODFATED. adj. [from clodfate.] Stupid; dull; doltish;
thou-thicks.

My clodfated relations spoiled the greatest genius in the world, when they bred me a mechanick.

CLODPOLL. n. f. [from clod and poll.] A thickfellow; a dolt;
a blockhead.

This letter being to excellently ignorant, he will find that it comes from a clodpoll.

To CLOG. v. a. [It is im-ined by Stinner to come from clog;
by Caf. adon derived from clog, a dog's collar, being thought to be first hung upon fierce dogs.]

1. To load with something that may hinder motion; to en-cumber with shackles; to impede, by fastening to the neck or leg a heavy piece of wood or iron.

If you find too much blood in his liver as will clog the foot of a flea, I'll eat the rest of the anatomy.

Let a man wear himself from these worldly impediments, that here clog his soul's flight.

The wings of birds were clog'd with ice and snow.

Fleethy lusts do deface mens minds, and clog their spirits, make them gross and foul, listless and unactive.

Gums and pomatums shall his sight strain,
While clogg'd he beats his sicken wings in vain.

2. To hinder; to obstruct.

The gutter'd rocks and congregated sands,
Traitors unscap'd to clog the gulleets keel.

His majesty's ships were not so over-plated and clogg'd with great ordnance as they are, whereof there is superfluity.

3. To lead; to burden; to embarrass.

Since thou halt far to go, bear not along
The clogging burden of a guilty soul.

You'll rue the time
That clog me with this answer.

They lanc'd a vein, and watch'd returning breath;

It came, but clogg'd with symptoms of his death.

All the commodities that go up into the country, are clogg'd with impositions as soon as they leave Leghorn.

4. In the following passage it is improper.

Clocks and jacks, though the screws and teeth of the wheels and nuts be never so smooth, yet, if they be not oil'd, will hardly move; though you clog them with never so much weight.

To CLOG. v. n.

1. To coalesce; to adhere. In this sense, perhaps, only corruptly used for clod or clot.

Move it sometimes with a broom, that the feds clog not together.

2. To be encumbered or impeded by some extrinsic matter.

In working through the bone, the teeth of the saw will begin to clog.

CLOG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A load; a weight; any incumbrance hung upon any animal or thing to hinder motion.

I'm glad at soul I have no other child;
For thy escape would teach me tyranny,
To hang clogs on them.

I did but prompt the age to quit their clogs,
By the known rules of ancient liberty.

As a dog committed clogs,
For some offence, by chance breaks loose,
And quits his clog; but all in vain,
He still draws after him his chain.

2. An incumbrance; a hindrance; an obstruction; an impediment.

The weariness of the flesh is an heavy clog to the will.

They're our clogs, not their own; if a man be Chain'd to a galley, yet the galley's free.

Their prince made no other step than rejecting the pope's supremacy, as a clog upon his own power and passions.

Slavery is, of all things, the greatest clog and obstacle to speculation.

3. A kind of additional shoe worn by women, to keep them from wet.

4. A wooden shoe.

In France the peasantry goes barefoot; and the middle sort, throughout all that kingdom, makes use of wooden clogs.

CLOGGINESS. n. f. [from cloggy.] The state of being clogged.

CLOGGY. adj. [from clog.] That which has the power of clogging up.

By additaments of some such nature, some grosser and claggy parts are retained; or else much subtilized, and otherwise altered. Boyle's History of Firms.

CLOIS FER. n. f. [clás, Welsh; clauwren, Sax. cluser, Germ. cluser, Dut. claufter, Ital. clostre, Fr. claustrum, Lat.]

1. A religious retirement; a monastery; a nunnery.

Nor in a secret cluser doth he keep These virgin spirits, until their marriage day. Davies.

Some solitary cluser will I choose,
And there with holy virgins live immur'd. Dryden.

How could he have the leisure and retiredness of the cluser, to perform those acts of devotion. Atterbury.

2. A peristyle; a piazza.

To CLOISTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To shut up in a religious house; to confine; to immure; to shut up from the world. Shakspeare.

They have by commandment, though in form of courtesy,
It was of the king's first acts to cluser the queen dowager in the nunnery of Bermondsey. Bacon.

Nature affords plenty of beauties, that no man need complain
if the deformed are clusered up. Rymer.

The gloom of cluser'd monks. Thompson.

CLOISTERAL. adj. [from cluser.] Solitary; retired; religiously reclusive.

Upon this ground many cluseral men of great learning and devotion, prefer contemplation before action. Warton.

CLOISTERED. participle adj. [from cluser.] 1. Solitary; inhabiting cloisters.

Like the bat hath flown
His cluser'd flight, there shall be done Shakspeare.

2. Built with peristyles or piazzas.

The Greeks and Romans had commonly two clusered open courts, one serving for the womens side, and the other for the men. Watson's Architecture.

CLOISTRESS. n. f. [from cluser.] A nun; a lady who has vowed religious retirement.

Like a cluseress she will veiled walk,
And water once a day her chamber round Shakspeare.

CLOKE. n. f. See CLOAK.

CLOMB. [pret. of To climb.]

Ask to what end they clomb that tedious height. Spenser.

So clomb this first grand thief into God's fold. Adison.

To CLOOM. v. a. [corrupted from clom, cheman, Sax. which is still used in some provinces.] To clofe or shut with glutinous or viscous matter.

Rear the hive enough to let them in, and clom up the faists, all but the door. Mortimer.

To CLOSE. v. a. [cluse, Armorick; cluyt, Dutch; clis, French; clavus, Latin.]

1. To shut; to lay together.

Sleep instantly fell on me, call'd
By nature as in aid, and clis'd mine eyes. Milnes.

When the sad wife has clis'd her husband's eyes;
Lies the pale corps, not yet intirely dead? Prior.

I soon shall visit Hector, and the shades
Of my great ancestors. Cephalus, thou Wilt lend a hand to cluse thy mistress's eyes. Philips.

2. To conclude; to end; to finish.

One frugal supper did our studies cluse,
I cluse this with my earnest desires that you will seriously consider your estate. Dryden.

Edward and Henry, now the boast of fame;
And virtuous Alfred, a more sacred name;
After a life of generous toils endur'd,
Clis'd their long glories with a sigh, to find
Th' unwilling gratitude of base mankind. Pope.

3. To inclose; to confine; to reposit.

Every one
According to the gift which bounteous nature
Hath in him clis'd. Shakspeare.

4. To join; to unite fractures; to consolidate fissures.

I be armourers accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers clusing rivets up. Shakspeare.

There being no winter yet to cluse up and unite its parts, and restore the earth to its former strength and compactness. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

As soon as any publick rupture happens, it is immediately clused up by moderation and good offices. Addison.

All the traces drawn there are immediately clused up, as though you wrote them with your finger on the surface of a river. Hart's Improvement of the Mind.

To CLOSE. v. n.

1. To coalesce; to join its own parts together.

A CLOUD. n. f. [The derivation is not known. Minshew derives it from claud, to shut; Senner from clod; Gafsaen

from azclot, darkness; Skinner from cladde, Dutch, a spot.]

1. The dark collection of vapours in the air.

Now are the clouds that lower'd upon our house,

In the deep bosom of the ocean buried. Shakespeare.

As a mist is a multitude of small but solid globules, which therefore descend; so a vapour, and therefore a watry cloud, is nothing else but a congeries of very small and concave globules, which therefore ascend, to that height in which they are of equal weight with the air, where they remain suspended, 'till, by some motion in the air, being broken, they descend in solid drops; either small, as in a mist, or bigger,

when many of them run together, as in rain. Grew.

Clouds are the greatest and most considerable of all the meteors, as furnishing water and plenty to the earth. They consist of very small drops of water, and are elevated a good distance above the surface of the earth; for a cloud is nothing but a mist flying high in the air, as a mist is nothing but a cloud here below. Locke.

How vapours, turn'd to clouds, obscure the sky;

And clouds, dissolv'd, the thirsty ground supply. Resaemmon.

2. The veins, marks, or stains in stones, or other bodies.

If you concert yourself frequently with words instead of ideas, or with cloudy and confused notions of things, how impenetrable will that darkness be. Waller.

3. Gloomy of look; not open, not cheerful.

So my storm-braten heart likewise is cheer'd

With that sun-shine, when cloudy looks are clear'd. Spenser.

Witness my son, now in the shade of death,

Whose bright outshining beams thy cloudy wrath

Hath in eternal darkness folded up. Shakespeare.

4. Marked with spots or veins.

Each clove of garlic is a sacred pow'r.

CLOVE-GILLYFLOWER. n. f. [from its smelling like cloves.]

This plant hath an intire, oblong, cylindrical, smooth cup, which is indented at the top; the petals of the flower are narrow at bottom, and broad at top; and are, for the most part, cut about the edges. The seed-vessel is of a cylindrical figure, containing many flat rough seeds. This genus may be divided into three classes: 1. The clove-gillyflower, or carnation. 2. The pink. 3. The sweet William. The carnation, or clove-gillyflower, is distinguished into four classes. The first, called flakes, having two colours only, and their stripes large, g. ing quite through the leaves. The second, called bizars, have flowers striped, or variegated with three or four different colours. The third are piquettes: these flowers have always a white ground, and are spotted with scarlet, red, purple, or other colour. The fourth are called painted ladies: these have their petals of a red or purple colour on the upper side, and are white underneath. Of each of these classes there are numerous varieties. The true clove-gillyflower has been long in use for making a cordial syrup. There are two or three varieties commonly brought to the markets, which differ greatly in goodness; some having very little scent, when compared with the true sort. The varieties of the pink are; the damask pink; white shock, scarlet, pheasant-eyed pink, of which there are great varieties; both with single and double flowers; old man's head; painted lady. Among the sweet Williams are, 1. The broad-leaved sweet William, with red flowers. 2. The broad-leaved sweet William, with variegated flowers. 3. The double sweet William, with red flowers, which burst their pods; 4. The rose-coloured double sweet William. 5. The narrow-leaved sweet William, called sweet John. Miller.

Crystal is a mineral body, in the difference of stones, made of a lentus percolation of earth, drawn from the moist pure and limpid juice thereof, owing to the coarseness of the earth some concurrence and coadjuvancy, but not immediate determination and efficiency.

COADJUNCTION. n. f. [from co, ad, unire, Lat.] The conjunction of different substances into one mass.

Bodies seem to have an intrinsic principle of, or corruption from, the coadjunction of particles endued with contrary qualities.

To COAGMENT. v. a. [from co and agmen, Latin.] To coagulate or heap together. I have only found the participle in use.

Had the world been coagmented from that supposed fortuitous jumble, this hypothesis had been tolerable.

COAGMENTATION. n. f. [from coagmentum.] Collection, or coaggregation into one mass; union; conjunction.

The third part rests in the well joining, cementing, and coagmentation of words, when it is smooth, gentle, and sweet.

COAGULABLE. adj. [from coagulare.] That which is capable of concretion.

Stones that are rich in vitriol, being often drenched with rain water, the liquor will then extract a fine and transparent substance, coagulabile into vitriol.

N° XXVI.

To COAGULATE. v. a. [coagulare, Latin.] To force into concretions; as, by the affusion of some other substance, to turn milk.

Roasted in wrath and fire,

And thus o'erfiz'd with coagulate gore.

Vivification ever consisteth in spirits attenuate, which the cold doth congeal and coagulate.

Stomach is found in lumps, or coagulated masses, in some spring.

The milk in the stomach of calves, which is coagulated by the summer, is again dissolved and rendered fluid by the gall in the duodenum.

To COAGULATE. v. n. To run into concretions, or congelations.

Spirit of wine commixed with milk, a third part spirit of wine, and two parts milk, coagulated little, but mingled;

and the spirit turns not above.

About the third part of the oil olive, which was driven over into the receiver, did there coagulate into a whitish body, almost like butter.

COAGULATION. n. f. [from coagulare.]

1. Concretion; congelation; the act of coagulating; the state of being coagulated.

2. The body formed by coagulation.

As the substance of coagulation is not merely saline, nothing dissolves them but what penetrates and relaxes at the same time.

COAGULATIVE. adj. [from coagulare.] That which has the power of causing concretion, or coagulation.

And to manifest yet further the coagulative power of them, we have sometimes in a minute arrested the fluidity of new milk, and turn'd it into a curdled substance, only by dextrously mingling with it a few drops of good oil of vitriol.

COAGULATOR. n. f. [from coagulare.] That which causes coagulation.

Coagulators of the humours are those things which expel the most fluid parts, as in the case of incrustations, or thickening; and by those things which suck up some of the fluid parts, as absorbents.

COAL. n. f. [cōl, Sax. kōl, Germ. köl, Dutch kool, Danish.]

1. The common fuel used.

Coal is a black, sulphurous, inflammatory substance, dug out of the earth, leaving but few. It is ranked among the minerals, and is common in Europe, though the English coal is of most re use. One species of pit-coal is called canal, or canal coal, which is found in the northern counties; and is hard, glossy and light, apt to blaze into thin flakes, and when kindled, yields a continuous flame till it be burnt out.

Coals are solid, dry, opaque, inflammable substances, found in large strata, splitting horizontally more easily than in any other direction; of a glossy hue, soft and friable, not fusible, but easily inflammable, and leaving a large residuum of ashes.

But age, enforced, falls by her own consent;

As coals to ashes, when the spirit's spent.

We shall meet with the same mineral lodged in coals, that elsewhere we found in marble.

2. The cinder of burnt wood, charcoal.

Whosoever doth so alter a body, as it returneth not again to that it was, may be called altera in majore, as when cheese is made of curds, or coals of wood, or bricks of earth.

3. Fire; any thing inflamed or ignited.

You are no surer, no,

Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,

Or halitones in the fun.

The race of jealousy than fir'd his soul,

And his face kindled like a burning coal.

You

Have blown this coal betwixt my lord and me.

To COAL. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To burn wood to charcoal.

Add the tinner's care and cost, in buying the wood for this service, felling, framing, and piling it to be burnt; in fetching the same when it is coaled, through such far, foul, and cumbersome way.

2. To delineate with a coal.

Marvalling, he coaled out rhimes upon the wall, near to the picture.

COAL-BLACK. adj. [coal and black.] Black in the highest degree; of the colour of a coal.

As burning Aetna, from his boiling stew,

Doth belch out flames, and rocks in pieces broke,

And ragged ribs of mountains madden new,

Enwrap in coal-black clouds and filthy smok.

Ethiopians and negroes become coal-black from fuliginous effluencies, and compendious tinctures.

Coal-black is his colour, but like jet it shines;

His legs and flowing tail were white alone.

COAL-BOX. n. f. [coal and box.] A box to carry coals to the fire.

Leave a pail of dirty water, a coal-bay, a bottle, a broom, and such other unwholesome things.
COAL-MINE. n. f. [coal and mine.] A mine in which coals are dug; a coal-pit.
 Springs are injurious to land, that flow from coal mines.
Mortimer.

COAL-PIT. n. f. [from coal and pit.] A pit made in the earth, generally to a great depth, for digging coals.
 A leaf of the polydory kind, found in the sinking of a coal-pit.
Woodward.

COAL-STONE. n. f. [coal and stone.] A sort of cannel coal.
 See COAL.

Coal-stone flames easily, and burns freely; but holds and endures the fire much longer than coal.
Woodward.

COAL-WORK. n. f. [coal and work.] A coalery; a place where coals are found.

There is a vast treasure in the old English, from whence authors may draw constant supplies; as our officers make their surest recruits from the coal-works and the mines.
Felton.

COALERY. n. f. [from coal.] A place where coals are dug.
 Two fine stalactites were found hanging from a black stone, at a deserted vault in Benwell coalery.
Woodward.

COALESCE. v. n. [coalesco, Latin.]

1. To unite in masses by a spontaneous approximation to each other.

When vapours are raised, they hinder not the transparency of the air, being divided into parts too small to cause any reflection in their superficies; but when they begin to coalesce, and confluence globules, those globules become of a convenient size to reflect some colours.
Newton.

2. To grow together; to join.
COALESCENCE. n. f. [from coalesco.] The act of coalescing; concretion; union.

COALITION. n. f. [from coalesco, coalitum, Latin.] Union in one mass or body; conjunction of separate parts in one whole.

The world's a mass of heterogeneous consistences, and every part thereof a coalition of distinguishable varieties.
Glarville.

In the first coalition of a people, their prospect is not great: they provide laws for their present exigence and convenience.

'Tis necessary that these squandered atoms should congregate and unite into great masses: without such a coalition the chaos must have reigned to all eternity.
Bentley.

COALY. adj. [from coal.] Containing coal.
Or easy line, or ancient hallow'd Dee.
Milton.

COAPTATION. n. f. [from coo and apto, Latin.] The adjustment of parts to each other.

In a clock the hand is moved upon the dial, the bell is struck, and the other actions belonging to the engine are performed by virtue of the size, shape, bigness, and coaptation of the several parts.
Boyle.

The same method makes both prose and verse beautiful, which consists in the judicious coaptation and ranging of the words.
Brown.

COARCT. v. a. [coarcto, Lat.]

1. To straiten; to confine into a narrow compass.

2. To contract power.

If a man coarcts himself to the extremity of an act, he must blame and impute it to himself, that he has thus coarcted or straitened himself so far.
Ascham.

COARCTATION. n. f. [from coarcto.]

1. Confinement; restraint to a narrow space.

The greatest winds, if they have no coarctation, or blow not hollow, give an interior sound.
Bacon.

2. Contraction of any space.

Siraighten the artery never so much, provided the sides of it do not meet, the vessel will continue to beat below, or beyond the coarctation.
Ray.

3. Restraint of liberty.

Election is opposed not only to coalition, but also to coarctation, or determination to one.
Bramhall.

COARSE. adj.

1. Not refined; not separated from impurities or baser parts.

Of what coarse metal ye are moulded.
Shakespeare.

2. Not soft or fine: used of cloth, of which the threads are large.

3. Rude; uncivil; rough of manners.

4. Gross; not delicate.

'Tis not the coarse rye of human law
 That birds their peace.
Thompson.

5. Ineligible; rude; unpolished.

Praise of Virgil is a sinist'ry, for presuming to copy, in my coarse English, his beautiful expressions.
Dryden.

6. Unaccomplished; unfinished by art or education.
 Practical rules may be useful to such as are remote from advice, and to coarse practitioners, which they are obliged to make use of.
Arbuthnot.

7. Mean; not nice; not elegant; vile.

Ill comfort, and a coarse perfume,
 Disgrace the delicacy of a scall.
Rowe.

A coarse and ufeless dunghill weed,
 Fix'd to one spot, to rot just as it grows.
 From this coarse mixture of terrestrial parts,
 Delire and fear by turns possess their hearts.
Dryden.

COARSELY. adv. [from coarse.]

1. Without fineness; without refinement.

2. Meanly; not elegantly.

John came neither eating nor drinking, but fared coarsely and poorly, according to the apparel he wore.
Pulgar Errata.

3. Rudely; not civilly.

The good cannot be too much honoured, nor the bad too coarsely used.
Dryden.

4. Inelegantly.

Be pleased to accept the rudiments of Virgil's poetry, coarsely translated; but which yet retains some beauties of the author.
Dryden.

COARSENESS. n. f. [from coarse.]

1. Impurity; unrefined state.

First know the materials whereof the glass is made; then consider what the reason is of the coarseness or dearness.
Bacon.

2. Roughness; want of fineness.

3. Grossness; want of delicacy.

'Tis with friends (pardon the coarseness of the illustration) as with dogs in couples; they should be of the same size.
L'Estrange.

4. Roughness; rudeness of manners.

A base wild olive he remains;
 The shrub the coarseness of the crown retains.
Gord.

5. Meanness; want of nicety.

Consider the penuriousness of the Hollanders, the coarseness of their food and raiments, and their little indulgence of pleasure.
Addison.

COAST. n. f. [coste, Fr. costa, Latin.]

1. The edge or margin of the land next the sea; the shore. It is not used for the banks of less waters.

He sees in English ships the Holland coast.
Dryden.

2. It seems to be taken by Newton for side, like the French côte. Some kind of virtue, lodged in some sides of the crystal, inclines and bends the rays towards the coast, of unusual refraction; otherwise the rays would not be refracted towards that coast rather than any other coast, both at their incidence and at their emergence, so as to emerge by a contrary refraction of the coast.
Newton.

3. The COAST is clear. A proverbial expression. The danger is over; the enemies have marched off.

Going out, and seeing that the coast was clear, Zelmox dismissed Muldorus.
Voltaire.

The royal spy, when now the coast was clear,
 Sought not the garden, but retir'd unseen.
Dryden.

TO COAST. v. n. [from the noun.] To sail close by the coast; to sail within sight of land.

But steer my vessel with a steady hand,
 And coast along the shore in sight of land.
Dryden.

The ancients coasted only in their navigation, seldom taking the open sea.
Arbuthnot.

TO COAST. v. a. To sail by; to sail near to.

Nearchus, the admiral of Alexander, not knowing the compass, was fain to coast that shore.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The greatest entertainment we found in coasting it, were the several prospects of woods, vineyards, meadows, and fields which lie on the borders of it.
Addison.

COASTING. n. f. [from coast.] He that sails timorously near the shore.

In our small skiff we must launch too far;
 We here but coasting, not discoveries are.
Dryden.

COAT. n. f. [cote, Fr. cotta, Italian.]

1. The upper garment.

He was armed with a coat of mail, and the weight of the coat was five thousand shakels of brass.

The coat of many colours they brought to their father, and said, this have we found: know now whether it be thy son's coat or no.
Gen. xxxvii. 32.

2. Petticoat; the habit of a boy in his infancy; the lower part of a woman's dress.

A friend's younger son, a child in coats, was not easily brought to his book.
Lewis.

3. The habit, or vesture, as demonstrative of the office.

For his intermeddling with arms, he is the more excusable, because many of his coat, in those times, are not only martial directors, but commanders.

Men of his coat should be minding their prayers, and not among ladies, to give themselves airs.
Swift.

4. The hair or fur of a beast; the covering of any animal.

He clad
 Their nakedness with skins of beasts; or flain,
 Or a the snake, with youthful coat repaid;
 And thought not much to clothe his enmities.
 Give your host: some powder of brimstone in his coat, and it will make his coat lie fine.
Johnson.

You have given us milk
 In luscious fit arms, and lent us your own coat
 Against the winter's cold.
Thompson.

5. Any tegument, tunic, or covering.
The eye is defended with four coats or skins. Peachem.
The optic nerves have their medullary parts terminating in the brain, their teguments terminating in the coats of the eye. Derbam.

had doubtless cockmatches also.

Arbuthnot.

COCKNEY. n. f. [A word of which the original is much con-troverted. The French use an expression, Pari de coqueins, for a country of dainties.

Pari est pour un riche un pari de coqueins.
Of this word they are not able to settle the original. It appears, whatever was its first ground, to be very ancient, being mentioned in an old Normanno-Saxon poem:

Far in see by well Spjng,
Is a lond þore Cokinge.

On which Dr. Hicks has his remark:
Nunc equis, equine. Quæ olim apud Gallos equis, gale et ventri deditos, ignavum, ignavum, desidiosum, desidiosum, se-nem significabant. Hinc urbani utpote a rusticis laboribus vitam solentariam, & quæ desidiosam avocatos parum nobis olim coqueins, quod nunc scribitur cockneys, vocabant. Et poeta hio noster in monachos & moniales, ut sepe gens

COCA. n. f. [causal, Span.] and therefore more properly written causa.]

A species of palm-tree, cultivated in most of the inhabited parts of the East and West Indies; but thought a native of the Maldives. It is one of the most useful trees to the inhabitants of America. The bark of the nut is made into cordage, and the shell into drinking bowls. The kernel of the nut affords them a wholesome food, and the milk contained in the shell a cooling liquor. The leaves of the trees are used for thatching their houses, and are also wrought into baskets, and most other things that are made of others in Europe. Miller.

The causa or chocolate nut is a fruit of an oblong figure, much resembling a large olive in size and shape. It is composed of a thin but hard and woody coat or skin, of a dark blackish colour; and of a dry kernel, filling up its whole cavity, dry, firm, and fatish to the touch, of a dusky colour, an agreeable smell, and a pleasant and peculiar taste. It was unknown to us 'till the discovery of America, where the natives not only drank the liquor made from the nuts, in the manner we do chocolate, but also used them as money. The tree is not very tall, but grows regularly, and is of a beautiful form, especially when loaded with its fruit. Its stem is of the thickness of a man's leg, and but a few feet in height; its bark rough, and full of tubercles; and its leaves six or eight inches long, half as much in breadth, and pointed at the ends. The flowers stand on the branches, and even on the trunk of the tree, in clusters, each having its own pedicle, an inch and sometimes less in length: they are small, of a yellowish colour, and are succeeded by the fruit, which is large and oblong, resembling a cucumber, five, six, or eight inches in length, and three or four in thickness; and, when fully ripe, it is of a purple colour. Within the cavity of this fruit are lodged the coeca nuts, usually about thirty in number. This tree flowers twice or three times in the year, and ripens many leaves of fruits. Hill.

Amid' tho' orchards of the sun,

Give me to drain the coad's milky bowl,

And from the palm to draw its fleshening wine. Thomson.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The monthly revolutions of the moon, or the diurnal of the earth upon its own axis, by the very hypothesis are coeval with the former. Bentley.

Silence! coeval with eternity;

Thou wert, ere nature first began to be;
'Twas one vast nothing all, and all slept fast in thee. Pope.

3. Sometimes by to.

Although we had no monuments of religion antienter than idolatry, we have no reason to conclude, that idolatrous religion was coeval to mankind. Hale.

COEVAL, n. f. [from the adjective.] A contemporary.

As it were not enough to have outdone all your coevals in wit, you will excel them in good nature. Pope.

COEVUS, adj. [coevus, Lat.] Of the same age.

Then it should not have been the first, as supposing some other thing coevus to it. South.

TO COEXIST, v. n. [coen and exist, Latin.]

1. To exist at the same time.

The three stars that coexist in heavenly constellations, are a multitude of stars. Hale.

Of substances no one has any clear idea, farther than of certain simple ideas coexisting together. Locke.

2. Followed by with.

It is sufficient that we have the idea of the length of any regular periodical appearances, which we can in our minds apply to duration, with which the motion or appearance never coexists. Locke.

COEXISTENCE, n. f. [from coexist.]

1. Having existence at the same time with another.

The measuring of any duration, by some motion, depends not on the real coexistence of that thing to that motion, or any other periods of revolution. Locke.

2. More commonly followed by with.

We can demonstrate the being of God's eternal ideas, and their coexistence with him. Grew.

COEXISTENT, adj. [from coexist.]

1. Having existence at the same time with another, with to.

To the measuring the duration of any thing by time, it is not requisite that that thing should be coexistent to the motion we measure by, or any other periodical revolution. Locke.

2. Sometimes with.

This proves no antecedent necessity, but coexistent with the act. Bramb. Answ. to Hobbs.

Time is taken for so much of infinite duration as is coexistent with the motions of the great bodies of the universe. Locke.

All that one point is either future or past, and no parts are coexistent or contemporary with it. Bentley.

TO COEXTEND, v. a. [coen and extende, Lat.] To extend to the same space or duration with another.

Every motion is, in some sort, coextended with the body moved. Grew.

COEXTENSION, n. f. [from coextend.] The act or state of extending to the same space or duration with another.

And though it be a spirit, yet I find it is no inconvenience to have some analogy, at least of coextension, with my body. Hale.

COFFEE, n. f. [It is originally Arabick, pronounced cahu by the Turks, and cahu by the Arabs.] The tree is a species of Arabick Jessamine, which see.

It is found to succeed as well in the Caribbee islands as in their native place of growth: but whether the coffee produced in the West Indies will prove as good as that from Mocha in Arabia Felix, time will discover. The berry brought from the Levant is most esteemed; and the berry, when ripe, it found as hard as horn.

COFFEE also denotes a drink prepared from the berries, very familiar in Europe for these eighty years, and among the Turks for one hundred and fifty. Some refer the invention of coffee to the Persians; from whom it was learned, in the fifteenth century, by a mufti of Adea, a city near the mouth of the Red Sea, where it soon came in vogue, and passed from thence to Mecca, and from Arabia Felix to Cairo. From Egypt the use of coffee advanced to Syria and Constantinople. Thevenot, the traveller, was the first who brought it into France; and a Greek servant, called Pasqua, brought into England by Mr. Daniel Edwards, a Turkey merchant, in 1652, to make his coffee, first set up the profession of coffee-man, and introduced the drink among us; though some say Dr. Harvey had used it before. Chambers.

They have in Turkey a drink called coffee, made of a berry of the same name, as black as foot, and of a strong scent, but not aromatick; which they take, beaten into powder, in water, as hot as they can drink it. This drink comforteth the brain and heart, and helpeth digestion. Bacon.

To part her time 'twixt reading and bohea,

Or o'er cold coffee trifle with the spoon. Pope.

COFFEEHOUSE, n. f. [coffee and hou.] A house of entertainment where coffee is sold, and the guests are supplied with news papers.

- COHERENCE. n. f. [coherentia, Lat.]
COHERENCY. n. f. [coherentia, Lat.]
1. That state of bodies in which their parts are joined together, from what cause soever it proceeds, so that they resist division and separation; nor can be separated by the same force by which they might be simply moved, or being only laid upon one another, might be parted again. Quincy.
The weight or pressure of the air will not explain, nor can be a cause of the coherence of the particles of air themselves. Locke.

Matter is either fluid or solid; words that may comprehend the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion. Bentley.

2. Connection; dependency; the relation of parts or things one to another.

It shall be no trouble to find each controversy's resting place, and the coherence it hath with things, either on which it dependeth, or which depend on it. Hosker.

Why between sermons and faith should there be ordinarily that coherence, which causes have with their usual effects? Hosker.

3. The texture of a discourse, by which one part follows another regularly and naturally.

4. Consistency in reasoning, or relating, so that one part of the discourse does not destroy or contradict the rest.

Coherence of discourse, and a direct tendency of all the parts of it to the argument in hand, are most eminently to be found in him. Locke.

COHERENT. adj. [coherens, Latin.]

1. Sticking together, so as to resist separation.
By coagulating and diluting, that is, making their parts more or less coherent. Arbutnot.

Where all must full, or not coherent be;
And all that rises, rise in due degree. Pope.

2. Suitable to something else; regularly adapted.
Instruct my daughter,
That time and place, with this deceit so lawful,
May prove coherent. Shakespeare.

3. Consistent; not contradictory to itself.
A coherent thinker, and a strict reasoner, is not to be made at once by a set of rules. Watts.

COHESION. n. f. [cohesio, Latin.]

1. The act of sticking together.

Hard particles, heaped together, touch in a few points, and must be separable by less force than breaks a solid particle, whose parts touch in all the space between them, without any pores or interstices to weaken their cohesion. Newton.

Solids and fluids differ in the degree of cohesion, which, being increased, turns a fluid into a solid. Arbutnot.

2. The state of union or inseparability.

What cause of their cohesion can you find?
What props support, what chains the fabric bind. Blackm.

3. Connection; dependence.

In their tender years, ideas that have no natural cohesion, come to be united in their heads. Locke.

COHESIVE. adj. [cohere, Latin.] That has the power of sticking to another, and of resisting separation.

COHESIVENESS. n. f. [cohesivitas, Latin.] The quality of being cohesive; the quality of resisting separation.

How turnips hide their swelling heads below,
And how the clove colleworts upwards grow.
Collewort. n. f. [from cole and wort.] Dryden.

COLICK. n. f. [colicus, Latin.]

It strictly is a disorder of the colon; but loosely, any disorder of the stomach or bowels that is attended with pain. There are four sorts: 1. A bilious colick, which proceeds from an abundance of acrimony or cholera irritating the bowels, so as to occasion continual gripes, and generally with a looseness; and this is best managed with lenitives and emollients. 2. A flatulent colick, which is pain in the bowels from flatulency and wind, which distend them into unequal and unnatural capacities; and this is managed with carminatives and moderate openers. 3. An hysterical colick, which arises from disorders of the womb, and is communicated by consent of parts to the bowels; and is to be treated with the ordinary hystericks. 4. A nervous colick, which is from convulsive spasms and contortions of the guts themselves, from some disorders of the spirits, or nervous fluid, in their component fibres; whereby their capacities are in many places frightened, and sometimes so as to occasion obstinate obstructions: this is best remedied by brisk catharticks, joined with opiates and emollient diluters. There is also a species of this distemper which is commonly called the stone colick, by consent of parts, from the irritation of the stone or gravel in the bladder or kidneys; and this is most commonly to be treated by nephriticks and city diuretics, and is greatly assu'd with the carminative turpentine clysters.

Colicks of infants proceed from acidity, and the air in the aliment expanding itself, while the aliment ferments. Colick. adv. [from colic.] Arbutnot.

COLMAR. n. f. [Fr.] A sort of PEAR, which see.

COLOGN Earth. n. f. Is a deep brown, very light ballard ochre, which, though generally esteemed a earth, is no pure native fossil; but contains more vegetable than mineral matter, and owes its origin to the remains of wood long buried in the earth. It is dug in France and Germany, particularly about Colong, nor is England without it. Hill.

COLON. n. f. [colonus.]

1. A point (:) used to mark a pause greater than that of a comma, and less than that of a period. Its use is not very exactly fixed, nor is it very necessary, being confounded by most with the semicolon. It was used before punctuation was refused, to mark almost any sense less than a period. To apply it properly, we should place it, perhaps, only where the sense is continued without dependence of grammar or construction; as, I love him; I despise him: I have long loved to trust, but shall never forbear to persecute him.

2. The greatest and widest of all the intestines, about eight or nine hands breadth long. It begins where the ileum coli, in the cavity of the os ilium on the right side; from thence ascending by the kidney, on the same side, it passes under the coecum concave side of the liver, to which it is sometimes tied, as likewise to the gall-bladder, which tinges it yellow in that place: then it runs under the bottom of the stomach to the spleen in the left side, to which it is also knit: from thence it turns down to the left kidney; and thence passing, in form of an S, it terminates at the upper part of the os sacrum, in the rectum. Quincy.

Now, by your cruelty hard bound,
I strain my guts, my colour wound. Swift.
The contents of the colon are of a four, fetid, acid smell in rabbits. Feyer on the Humors.

COLONEL. n. f. [Of uncertain etymology. Stimmer imagines it originally colonia, the leader of a colony. Ainsworth deduces it from colonus, a pillar; as patriæ columnæ exercitus columnæ. Each is plausible.] The chief commander of a regiment; a field officer of the highest rank, next to the general officers. It is now generally founded with only two distinct syllables, colonel.

The chiefest help must be the care of the colonel, that hath the government of all his garrison. Spenser.

Captain or colonel, or knight in arms,
Whose chance on these defenceless doors may seize,
If deed of honour did thee ever please,
Guard them, and him within protect from harms. Milton.

COLONELSHIP. n. f. [from colonel.] The office or character of colonel.

While he continued a subaltern, he complained against the pride of colonels towards their officers; yet, in a few minutes after he had received his commission for a regiment, he confessed: at colonelship was coming fast upon him. Swift.
TO COLONIZE. v. a. [from colony.] To plant with inhabitants; to settle with new planters; to plant with colonies.

There was never an hand drawn, that did double the rest of the habitable world, before this; for so a man may truly term it, if he shall put to account as well that that is, as that which may be hereafter, by the farther occupation and colonizing of those countries: and yet it cannot be affirmed, if one speak ingenuously, that it was the propagation of the Christian faith that was the adamant of that discovery, entry, and plantation; but gold and silver, and temporal profit and glory; so that what was first in God's providence, was but second in man's appetite and intention. Poets.

Druidæ hath advantage by acquit of islands, which the colonia and forthwith daily. Havel.

COLONNADE. n. f. [from colonna, Ital. a column.]

1. A peristyle of a circular figure, or a series of columns, disposed in a circle, and insulated within side. Builder's Dict.
Here circling colonnades the ground inclose,
And here the marble statues breathe in rows. Addison.

COLOSSAL. adj. [colossus, Lat.] In form of a colossus; of the height and bigness of such a statue; giantlike.

COLOUR. n. f. [color, Latin.]

1. The appearance of bodies to the eye only; hue; die.

It is a vulgar idea of the colours of solid bodies, when we perceive them to be a red, or blue, or green tincture of the surface; but a philosophical idea, when we consider the various rays to be different sensations, excited in us by the refracted rays of light, reflected on our eyes in a different manner, according to the different size, or shape, or situation of the particles of which the surfaces of those bodies are composed. Hutton's Legit.

Her hair shall be of what colour is please God. Shakspeare.

For though our eyes can now-hut but colours see,
Yet colours give them not their power of sight. Darwin.

The light of colours are more relangible one than another in this order; red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, deep violet. Newton's Opticks.

2. The freshness; or appearance of blood in the face.
My cheeks no longer did their colour boast. Dryden.

A sudden horror seiz'd his giddy head,
And his ears trickled, and his colour fled. Dryden.

3. The tint of the painter.
When each bold figure just begins to live,
The treach'rous colours the fair art betray,
And all the bright creation fades away. Pope.

4. The representation of any thing superficially examined.
Whose wisdom is only of this world, to put false colours upon things, to call good evil, and evil good, against the conviction of their own consciences. Swift.

5. Concealment; palliation; excuse; superficial cover.
It is no matter if I do halt; I have the wars for my colour, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable. Shakspeare.

Their sin admitted no colour or excuse. K. Charles.

6. Appearance; pretence; false shew.
Under the colour of commending him,
I have access my own love to prefer. Shakspeare.

Merchants came to Rhodes with a great ship laden with corn, under the colour of the sale whereof they noted all that was done in the city. Kalier.

7. Kind; species; character.
Boys and women agree, for the most part, cattle of this colour. Shakspeare. As you like it.

8. In the plural, a standard; an ensign of war: they say the colours of the foot, and standard of horse.

He at Venice gave
His body to that pleasant country's earth,
And his pure soul unto his captain Christ,
Under whose colours he had fought so long. Shakspeare.

Against all checks, rebukes, and manners,
I must advance the colours of my love,
And not retire. Shakspeare.

The banks on both sides were filled with companies, passing all along the river under their colours, with trumpets sounding. Knodler's History of the Turks.

An author compares a ragged coin to a tattered colours. Add.

TO COLOUR. v. a. [colora, Latin.]

1. To mark with some hue, or die.

The rays, to speak properly, are not coloured: In them there is nothing else than a certain power and disposition to stir up a sensation of this or that colour. Newton.

2. To palliate; to excuse; to dress in specious colours, or fair appearances.

I told him, that I would not favour or colour in any fort his former folly. Relapsh's Essay.

He colours the falsehood of Aeneas by an express command from Jupiter to forsake the queen. Dryden.

3. To make scarce heard of an infuression that was not coloured with grievances of the highest kind, or countenanced by one or more branches of the legislature. Addison.

4. TO COLOUR. a stranger's gentis, is when a freeman allows a foreigner to enter goods at the customhouse in his name; so that the foreigner pays but single duty, when he ought to pay double. Pittip.

TO COLOUR. v. n. To blush. A low word, only used in conversation.

COLOURABLE. adj. [from colour.] Specious; plausible. It is now little used.

They have now a colourable pretence to withstand innovations, having accepted of other laws and rules already. Spenser.

They were glad to lay hold on so colourable a matter, and to traduce him as an author of suspicious innovation. Hooker.

4 Y

Had I sacrificed ecclesiastical government and revenues to their covetousness and ambition, they would have found no conceivable necessity of an army. K. Charles.

We hope the mercy of God will confider us unto some mitigation of our offences; but has not the fincerity of our parents in a probable expectations. Brown.

COLOURING. n. f. [from colour.] The part of the painter's art that teaches to lay on his colours with propriety and beauty.

From line drawn true, our eye may trace
A foot, a knee, a hand, a face;
Yet if the colouring be not there,
At best 'twill only not displease. Prior.

COLOURIST. n. f. [from colour.] A painter who excels in giving the proper colours to his designs.

Titan, Paul Veronese, Van Dyck, and the rest of the good colourists, have come nearest to nature. Dryden.

COLOURLESS. adj. [from colour.] Without colour; not distinguished by any hue; transparent.

Transparent substances, as glass, water and air, when made very thin by being blown into bubbles, or otherwise formed into plates, exhibit various colours, according to their various thickness; although, at a greater thickness, they appear very clear and colourless. Newton.

Pellucid colourless glass or water, by being beaten into a powder or froth, do acquire a very intense whiteness. Bentley.

COLT. n. f. [colt, Saxon.]

1. A young horse: used commonly for the male offspring of a horse, as foal for the female.

The colt hath about four years of growth, and so the fawn, and so the calf. Bacon's Natural History.

Like colts or unmanaged horses, we start at dead bones, and lifeless blocks. Taylor's Holy Living.

No spore, but what be'long to war, they know;
To break the stubborn colt, to bend the bow. Dryd.

There it is not strange, that the mind should give itself up to the common opinion, or render itself to the first comers. Locke.
COMET. n. f. [cometa, Latin, a hairy star.]

A heavenly body in the planetary region appearing suddenly, and again disappearing; and, during the time of its appearance, moving through its proper orbit, like a planet.

The orbits of comets are ellipses, having one of their foci in the center of the sun; and being very long and eccentric, they become invisible, when in that part most remote from the sun. Comets, popularly called blazing stars, are distinguished from other stars by a long train or tail of light, always opposite to the sun; hence arises a popular division of comets into three kinds, bearded, tailed, and beared comets; though the division rather relates to the different circumstances of the same comet, than to the phenomena of the several. Thus when the comet is eastward of the sun, and moves from it, the comet is said to be bearded, barbatus, because the light marches before it. When the light is westward of the sun, the comet is said to be tailed, because the train follows it. When the comet and the sun are diametrically opposite, the earth being between them, the train is hid behind the body of the comet, excepting a little that appears around it, in form of a border of hair, hence called crinitus.

According to Sir Isaac Newton, the tail of a comet is a very thin slender vapour, emitted by the head or nucleus of the comet, ignited by their near neighbourhood to the sun, and this vapour is furnished by the atmosphere of the comet. The tails are of various lengths; and being produced in the perihelions of the comets, will go off along with their heads into remote regions, and there gradually vanish, till the comets return towards the sun. The vapours of comets being thus dilated, rarified, and diffused through all the celestial region, may probably, by little and little, by means of their own gravity, be attracted down to the planets, and become intermingled with their atmospheres. For the conservation of the water, and moisture of the planets, comets seem absolutely requisite; from whole condensed vapours and exhalations all that moisture which is spent in vegetations and putrefactions, and turned into dry earth, may be resupplied and renewed; for all vegetables grow and increase wholly from fluids; and, as to their greatest part, turn by putrefaction into earth again, an earthy flame being perpetually precipitated to the bottom of putrefying liquors. Hence the quantity of dry earth must continually increase, and the moisture of the globe decrease, and at last be quite evaporated, if it have not a continual supply from some part or other of the universe. And I suppose, adds Sir Isaac, that the spirit which makes the fluids, fluids, and build part of our air, and which is absolutely requisite to the life and being of all things, comes principally from the comets. On this principle there seems to be some foundation for the popular opinion of presages from comets; since the tail of a comet, thus intermingled with our atmosphere, may produce changes very sensible in animal and vegetable bodies.

The same great author has computed that the sun's heat, in the comet of 1680, was to his heat with us at Midsummer, as twenty-eight thousand to one; and that the heat of the body of the comet, was near two thousand times as great as that of red-hot iron. He also calculates, that a globe of red-hot iron, of the dimensions of our earth, would scarce be cool a fifty thousand years. If then the comet be supposed to cool a hundred times as fast as red-hot iron, yet, since its heat was a thousand times greater, supposing it of the bigness of the earth, it would not be cool in a million of years. Hitherto no comet has threatened the earth with a nearer approach than that of 1780, for, by calculation, Dr. Halley found, on November 11, that comet was not above one semidiameter of the earth to the northward of the way of the earth; at which time, had the earth been in that part of its orbit, the comet would have had a parallax equal to that of the moon. What might have been the consequence of so near an approach: a contact or shock of the celestial bodies? a deluge, Mr. Whiston says. Astronomers have been divided about the return of comets, and time and observation must determine the question. However, Dr. Halley has foretold the return of one in 1758, which formerly appeared in 1476. Trevise. Clavius.

And wherefore gaze this goodly company,
As if they saw some wondrous monument,
Some comet, or an unusual prodigy, Shakespeare.
Such his fell glances as the fatal light
Of blazing comets. Colman.

I considered a comet, or, in the language of the vulgar, a blazing star, as a sky-rocket discharged by an hand that is almighty. Adelphi's Guardian.

Fierce meteors shoot their arbitrary light,
And comets march with lawless horrors bright. Pier.

Seals a commission to a blank of danger. Shakspeare.

The subjects' grief

Comes through commissions, which compel from each

The sixth part of his subsilience, to be levied

Without delay. Shakspeare.

He led our powers;

Bore the commission of my place and person;

The which immediacy may well stand up,

And call itself your brother. Shakspeare.

He would have them fully acquainted with the nature and extent of their office, and so he joins commission with instruction: by one he conveys power, by the other knowledge. Crat.

3. A warrant by which a military officer is constituted.

Solyman, filled with the vain hope of the conquest of Persia, gave out his commissions into all parts of his camp, for the raising of a mighty army. Crat.

I was made a colony; though I gained my commissio by the horse's virtues, having leapt over a fix bar gate. Anglo.

He for his son a gay commissio buys,

Who drinks, whores, fights, and in a duel dies. Prior.

4. Charge; mandate; office; employment.

It was both a strange commissio, and a strange obedience to a commissio, for men, in the midst of their own blood, and being so furiously assailed, to hold their hands contrary to the laws of nature and necessity. Bacon.

Such commissio from above

I have receiv'd, to answer thy desire

Of knowledge within bounds: beyond, abstain

To ask. Milton.

At his command the storms invade;

The winds by his commissio blow;

'Till with a nod he bids them cease. Dryden.

He bore his great commissio in his look;

But sweetly temper'd awe, and soften'd all he spoke. Dryden.

5. Act of committing a crime; perpetration. Sins of commission are distinguished in theology from sins of omission.

might be proper to deliver upon this occasion.

Swift.

2. Arde: for sending to prison.

COMMITTEE. n. f. [from commit.]

Those to whom the consideration or ordering of any matter is referred, either by some court to whom it belongs, or by consent of parties. As in parliament, after a bill is read, it is either agreed to and passed, or not agreed to; or neither of these, but referred to the consideration of some appointed by the house, to examine it farther, who thereupon are called a committee.

Cruel.

Manchester had orders to march thither, having a committee of the parliament with him, as there was another committee of the Scottish parliament always in that army; there being also now a committee of both kingdoms residing at London, for the carrying on the war.

Clarendon.

All corners were filled with covenanters, confusion, commis- sion men, and soldiers, serving each other to their ends of vengeance, or power, or profit; and these committee men and soldiers were puffed with this covenant.

H. Allen.

COMMITTER. n. f. [from commit.] Perpetrator; he that com- mits.

Such an one makes a man not only a partaker of other mens sins, but a deliver of the whole guilt to himself; yet so as to leave the committer as full of guilt as before. South.
COMMITTABLE. adj. [from commit.] Liable to be commis- sed.

Besides the mistakes committable in the solar compute of years, the difference of chronology disturbs his computes.

Bacon's Vulgar Errors.

To COMMIT. v. a. [from commit., Lat.] To mingle; to blend;
to mix; to unite with things in one mass.

A dram of gold, dissolved in aqua regia, with a dram of copper in aqua fortis committed, gave a great colour. Bacon.

in the clouds; or, on the earth, out of dust and rain-water committed.

Roy.

It is manifest by this experiment, that the committed impressions of all the colours do stir up and beget a sensation of white; that is, that whiteness is compounded of all the colours.

Newton.

COMMITTION. n. f. [from commis.] Mixture; incorporation of different ingredients.

Were thy *commis*ion Greek and Trojan, so
That thou couldst say, this hand is Grecian all,
And this is Trojan.

Shakspere.

COMMITTON. n. f. [from commis.] Mixture; incorporation;
union of various substances in one mass.

Some species there be of middle and participating natures, that is, of birds and beasts, as bats, and some few others, so confirmed and set together, that we cannot define the beginning or end of either; there being a *commis*ion of both in the whole, rather than adaptation or cement of the one unto the other.

Brewer's Vulgar Errors.

COMMITTURE. n. f. [from commis.]

1. The act of mingling; the state of being mingled; incorporation; union in one mass.

In the *commis*ture of any thing that is more oily or sweet, such bodies are least apt to putrefy, the air working little upon them.

Bacon.

2. The mass formed by mingling different things; composition;
compound.

Fair ladies, mask'd, are roses in the bud;
Or angels veild in clouds: are roses blown,

Dismask'd, their damask fweet *commis*ture blown. Shaksp.

My love and fear grew'd many friends to thee;

And now I fall, thy tough *commis*tures melt,

Impairing Henry, strength'ning misproud York. Shakspere.

There is scarcely any rising but by a *commis*ture of good and evil acts.

Baon.

All the circumstances and respect of religion and state intermixed together in their *commis*tures, will better become a royal history, or a council-table, than a single life.

Watson.

COMMODE. n. f. [French.] The head-dress of women.

Let them select how they would be affected, should they meet with a man on horseback, in his breeches and jack-boots, dressed up in a commode and a nightgall.

by long prescription, obtained in this nation the force of law.
It is distinguished from the statute law, which owes its authority to acts of parliament.
- COMMON PLACES. The king's court now held in Westminster-hall, but anciently moveable. Croix observes, that all Henry III. granted the magna charta there were but two courts, the exchequer, and the king's bench, so called because it followed the king; but upon the grant of that charter, the court of common pleas was erected, and settled at Westminster. All civil causes, both real and personal, are or were formerly tried in this court, according to the strict laws of the realm;
and Forrester represents it as the only court for real causes.
The chief judge is called the lord chief justice of the common pleas, and he is assisted by three or four associates, created by letters patent from the king. Croix.
- COMMONABLE. adj. [from communis.] What is held in com-

The hateful commons will perform for us;
Except, like cur, to tear us all in pieces. Shakespeare.
Hath he not paid the nobles and the common? Shakespeare.
These three to kings and chiefs their fancies display,
The rest before th' ignoble commons play. Dryden's Fables.

The gods of greater nations dwell around,
And, on the right and left, the palace bound;
The commons where they can: the nobler sort,
With winding doors wide open, front the court. Dryden.

2. The lower house of parliament, by which the people are represented, and of which the members are chosen by the people.

My good lord,
How now for mitigation of this bill
Urg'd by the common? Doth his majesty Incline to it, or no? Shakespeare. Henry VI.
In the house of commons many gentlemen, unsatisfied of his guilt, durst not condemn him. King Charles.

3. Food; fare; diet: so called from colleges, where it is eaten in common.

He painted himself of a dove-colour, and took his commons with pigeons. L'Estrange.

Mean while the quench'd his fury at the flood,
And with a silent fallid cool'd his blood:
Their commons, though but coarse, were nothing scant;
Nor did their minds an equal banquet want. Dryden.

The doctor now obeys the summons,
Likes both his company and commons;
Displays his talent; sits till ten;
Next day invited, comes again. Swift.

COMMONWEALTH, n. f. [from communis and terra, or terra.]
1. A polity; an established form of civil life.

Two foundations bear up public societies; the one inclination, whereby all men desire sociable life; the other an interest agreed upon, touching the manner of their union in living together: the latter is that which we call the law of a commonwealth. Hobbes.

It was impossible to make a commonwealth in Ireland, without settling of all the estates and possessions throughout the kingdom. Lives in Ireland.

A continual parliament would but keep the commonwealth in tune, by preserving laws in their vigour. King Charles.
There is no body in the commonwealth of learning who does not profess himself a lover of truth. Locke.

Full of protest, and oath, and big compare,
Want similes. Shakspeare, Troilus and Criseida.

COMPARISON, n. f. [comparatio, French.]
1. The act of comparing.
Nai is Crimes, comparing his paws with those of a man, reckons his claws among them, which are a much more like those of a lion: so easy it is to drive on the *compari*son too far, to make it good. Grass's History.

Our author saves me the *compari*son with tragedy; for he says, that herein he is to imitate the tragick poet. Dryden.

2. The state of being compared.
If we will rightly estimate what we call good and evil, we shall find it lies much in *compari*son. Locke.

Objects near our view are apt to be thought greater than those of a larger size that are more remote; and so it is with pleasure and pain: the present is apt to carry it, and those at a distance have the disadvantage in the *compari*son. Locke.

3. A comparative estimate; proportion.
If men would live as religion requires, the world would be a most lovely and desirable place, in *compari*son of what now it is. Tillotson's Sermon.

One can scarce imagine how so plentiful a soil should become so miserably unpeopled, in *compari*son of what it once was. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

And not dissemble them?

The knowledge of what is good and what is evil, what ought and what ought not to be done, is a thing too large to be compass'd, and too hard to be mastered, without brains and study, parts and contemplation. Locke.

He had a mind to make himself master of Weymouth, if he could compass it without engaging his army before it. Gravel.

The church of Rome creatheth titular patriarchs of *Com*stanti-nople and Alexandria; so loth is the pope to lose the command of any title that he hath once compass'd. Bryant.

Invention is the first part, and absolutely necessary to them both; yet no rule ever was, or ever can be given, how to compass it. Dryden's Description.

In every work regard the writer's end, Pope.
Since none can compass more than they intend.

6. [In law.] To take measures preparatory to any thing; as to compass the death of the king.

COMPASS, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Circle; round. Tit.

- This day I breathed first; time is not come round;
And where I did begin, there shall I end:
My life is run its compass. Shakespeare.
1. Extent; reach; grasp.
O, Juliet, I already know thy grief;
It strains me past the compass of my wits. Shakespeare.
That which is out of the compass of any man's power, is to that man impossible. South.
How few there are may be justly bewailed, the compass of them extending but from the time of Hippocrates to that of Marcus Antoninus. Temple.
Animals in their generation are wiser than the sons of men;
but their wisdom is confined to a few particulars, and lies in a very narrow compass. Addison.
This author hath tried the force and compass of our language with much success. Swift.
3. Space; room; limits.

having constantly before his eyes the state of his affairs, in a regular course of account. Lacke.
7. The power of the voice to express the notes of music.
You would found me from my lowest note to the top of my compass. Shakespeare.
From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began:
From harmony to harmony,
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.
8. [This is rarely used in the singular.] The instrument with which circles are drawn.
If they be two, they are two fo,
As stiff twin compasses prepar'd
In God's eternal store, to circumscribe
This universe, and all created things. Milton.
To fix one foot of their compass wherever they think fit, and extend the other to such terrible lengths, without describing any circumference at all, is to leave us and ourselves in a very uncertain state. Swift.
9. The instrument composed of a needle and card, whereby mariners steer.
The breath of religion fills the sails, profit is the compass by which fustious men steer their course. King Charles.

No useful compass or meridian known:
Coasting, they kept the land within their ken,
And knew no North but when the pole-star shone. Dryden.
With equal force the tempest blows by turns,
From ev'ry corner of the seamen's compass. Rowe.
He that first discovered the use of the compass, did more for the supplying and increase of useful commodities than those who built workhouses. Lacke.
- COMPASS-SAW. n. f.
The compass-saw should not have its teeth set, as other saws have; but the edge of it should be made so broad, and the back so thin, that it may easily follow the broad edge, without having its teeth set. Its office is to cut a round, or any other compass kerf; and therefore the edge must be made broad, and the back thin, that the back may have a wide kerf to turn in. Moxon.
- COMPASSION. n. f. [compassio, Fr. from com and patior, Lat.]
Pity; commiseration; sorrow for the sufferings of others;

The treaty at Uxbridge gave the sweetest hopes of an happy composure. King Charles.

Van guard! to right and left the front unfold,

That all may see, who hate us, how we seek

Peace and composure. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Things were not brought to an extremity where I set the story: there seems yet to be room left for a composure; hereafter there may be only for pity. Diderot.

COMPUTATION. n. f. [computatio, Lat.] The act of dividing or tripling together.

Secrecy to words spoken under the rose, only mean, is computation, from the ancient custom in symbolick meanings, to wear chaplets of roses. Brewster's Vulgar Latin.

If thou wilt prolong

Dire computation, forthwith reason quits

Her empire to confusion and misrule,

And vain debates; then twenty tongues at once

Confuse in senseless jargon; nought is heard

But din and various clamour, and mad rant. Priestley.

TO COMPOUND. v. a. [compono, Latin.]

1. To mingle many ingredients together in one mass.

2. To form by uniting various parts.

Whoever compounds any like it, shall be cut off. Ex. xxx.

It will be difficult to evince, that nature does not make compounded bodies; I mean, mingle together such bodies as are already compounded of elementary, or rather of simple ones. Boyle's Sceptical Chymist.

The ideas, being each but one single perception, are altogether than the more complex ones; and therefore are not liable to the uncertainty, which attends those compounded ones. Locke.

3. To mingle in different positions; to combine.

We cannot have a single image that did not enter through the fight; but we have the power of altering and compounding those images into all the varieties of picture. Addison.

4. [In grammar.] To form one word from two or more words. Where it and Tigra embrace each other under the city of Apamia, there do they agree of a joint and compounded name, and are called Pis-Tigra. Raleigh.

1. Conception; thought; idea; image in the mind.

Here the very shepherds have their fancies lifted to so high concepts, as the learned of other nations are content both to borrow their names and imitate their cunning. Sidney.

Impossible it was, that ever their will should change or incline to renit any part of their duty, without some object having force to avert their conceit from God. Hesket.

His grace looks cheerfully and smooth this morning:
There's some conceit, or other likes him well,
When that he bids good-morrow with such spirit. Shakespeare.

In laughing there ever precedeth a conceit of somewhat ridiculous, and therefore it is proper to man. Bacon.

2. Understanding; reason; of apprehension.

How often alas! did her eyes lay unto me, that they loved?
and yet, I not looking for such a matter, had not my conceit bent to understand them. Sidney.

The first kind of things appointed by laws humane, containeth whatsoever is good or evil, is notwithstanding more secret than that it can be discerned by every man's present conceit, without some deeper discourse and judgment. H. h. r.

I shall be found of a quick conceit in judgment, and shall be admired. 1674. viii. 11.

3. Opinion, generally in a sense of contempt; fancy; imagination; fantastical notion.

I know not how conceit may rob

The treasury of life, when life itself

Yields to the theft.

Strong conceit, like a new principle, carries all easily with it, when yet above common sense.

Malbranche has an odd conceit,

As ever enter'd Frenchman's pate.

4. Opinion in a neutral sense.

Seest thou a man wife in his own conceit? there is more hope of a fool than of him.

I shall not fail to approve the fair conceit

The king hath of you.

5. A pleasant fancy.

His wit is as thick as Tewksbury mustard: there is no more conceit in him than is in a mallet.

While he was on his way to the gibbet, a freak took him in the head to go off with a conceit.

6. Sentiment, as distinguished from imagery.

Some to conceit alone their works confine,

And glittering thoughts truck out at ev'ry line.

7. Fondness; favourable opinion; opinionative pride.

CONCENTRIC, adj. mon centre.

If, as in water stir'd, more circles be

Produc'd by one, love such additions take;

Those, like so many spheres, but one heav'n make;

For they are all concentric unto thee.

Any substance, pitched steadily upon two points, as on an axis, and moving about on that axis, also describes a circle.

CONCENTRIC, adj. To the axis.

If the crystalline humour had been concentric to the li-rodes, the eye would not have admitted a whole hemisphere at one view.

If a stone be thrown into stagnating water, the waves excited thereby continue fume time to arise in the place where the stone fell into the water, and are propagated from thence into concentric circles upon the surface of the water to great distances.

The manner of its concretion is by concentric rings, like those of an onion about the first kernel.

Circular revolutions in concentric ovals about the sun, or other central body, could in no way be attained without the power of the Divine arm.

CONCEPTUAL, n. f. [conceptualis, Lat.] That in which any thing is contained; a vessel.

That

There is at this day resident, in that huge conceivable, water enough to effect such a deluge. Hodgson.

CONCEPTIBLE, adj. [from con-ceptum, Latin.] That may be conceived; intelligible; capable to be understood.

Some of his attributes, and the manifestations thereof, are not only highly delectable to the intellectual faculty, but are most suitable and easily conceivable by us, because apparent in his works. Hale.

CONCEPTION, n. f. [conception, Latin.]

1. The act of conceiving, or quickening with pregnancy.

I will greatly multiply thy sorrow, and thy conception; In sorrow thou shalt bring forth children. Genesis.

Thy sorrow I will greatly multiply

By thy conception; children thou shalt bring In sorrow forth. Milton.

2. The state of being conceived.

Joy had the like conception in our eyes,

And at that instant, like a babe, sprung up. Shakespeare.

Our own productions flatter us: it is impossible not to be fond of them at the moment of their conception. Dryden.

3. Notion; idea; image in the mind.

As conceptions are the images or resemblances of things to the mind within itself, in the like manner are words or names the marks, tokens, or resemblances of those conceptions to the minds of them whom we converse with. South.

Consult the acutest poets and speakers, and they will confess that their quickest, most admired conceptions were such as darted into their minds, like sudden flashes of lightning, they knew not how, nor whence; and not by any certain consequence, or dependence of one thought upon another, as it is in matters of ratiocination. South.

To have right conceptions about them, we must bring our understandings to the inflexible natures and unalterable relations of things, and not endeavour to bring things to any preconceived notions of our own. Locke.

4. Sentiments; purpose.

Thou but remember'st me of my own conception. I have perceived a most faint neglect of late; which I have rather blamed as my own jealous curiosity, than as a very pretence and purpose of unkindness. Shakespeare.

Please your highness, note

His dangerous conception in this point:

Not friendly by his wish to your high person,

His will is most malignant, and it stretches

Beyond you to your friends. Shakespeare.

5. Apprehension; knowledge.

And as if beasts conceiv'd what reason were,

And that conception should distinctly show

They should the name of reasonable bear;

For, without reason, none could reason know. Droiles.

6. Concoit; sentiment; pointed thought.

He is too faultless sometimes, and sometimes too dry; many times unequal, and almost always forced; and, besides, is full of conceptions, points of epigram, and witicisms; all which are not only below the dignity of heroic verse, but contrary to its nature. Dryden.

CONCEPTUOUS, adj. [conceptum, Latin.] Apt to conceive; fruitful; pregnant.

Common mother,

Entreat thy fertile and conceptuous womb;

Let it no more bring out to ingratul man. Shakespeare.

CONCEPTIVE, adj. [conceptum, Lat.] Capable to conceive.

In hot climates, and where the uterine parts exceed in heat, by the coldness of this simple they may be reduced into a conceptive constitution. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CONCERN, v. a. [concernere, Fr. concernere, low Latin.]

1. To relate to; to belong to.

Exclude the use of natural reasoning about the sense of holy scripture, concerning the articles of our faith; and then, that the scripture doth concern the articles of our faith, who can assure us? Hosker.

Count Claudio may hear; for what I would speak of concerns him. Shakespeare.

Gracious things

Thou hast reveal'd; of those chiefly which concern

Just Abraham, and his feed. Milton.

This place concerns not at all the dominion of one brother over the other. Locke.

2. To affect with some passion; to touch nearly; to be of importance to.

I would not

The cause were known to them it most concerns. Shakespeare. Our wars with France have affected us in our most tender interests, and concerned us more than those with any other nation. Addison.

It much concerns them not to suffer the king to establish his authority on this side. Addison.

The more the authority of any station in society is extended, the more it concerns publick happiness that it be committed to men fearing God. Rogers.

3. To interest; to engage by interest.

I knew a young negroe who was sick of the small-pox: I fought by enquiry, at a person's concerned for him, that the little tumours left whitish specks behind them. Boyle.

Above the rest two goddesses appear,

Concern'd for each: here Venus, Juno there. Dryden.

Providence, where it loves a nation, concerns itself to own and assert the interest of religion, by blasting the spoilers of religious persons and places. South.

Whatever past actions it cannot reconcile, or appropriate to that present self by consciousness, it can be no more concerned in than if they had never been done. Locke.

They think themselves out of the reach of Providence, and no longer concerned to solicit his favour. Rogers.

4. To disturb; to make uneasy.

In one compressing engine I shut a sparrow, without forcing any air in; and in an hour the bird began to pant, and be concerned, and in less than an hour and a half to be sick. Derham.

CONCERN, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Business; affair; considered as relating to some one.

Let early care thy main concerns secure,

Things of less moment may delays endure. Denham.

This manner of exposing the private concerns of families, and sacrificing the secrets of the dead to the curiosity of the living, is one of those licentious practices which might well deserve the animadversion of our government. Addison.

A heathen emperor said, if the gods were offended, it was their own concern, and they were able to vindicate themselves. Swift.

Religion is no trifling concern, to be performed in any careles and superficial manner. Rogers.

2. Interest; engagement.

No plots th' alarm to his retirements give;

'Tis all mankind's concern that he should live. Dryden.

When we speak of the conflagration of the world, there have no concern in the question. Burton.

3. Importance; moment.

Mytherious secrets of a high concern,

And weighty truths, solid convincing sense,

Explains'd by unaffected eloquence. Roscommon.

The mind is stunned and dazzled amidst that variety of objects: she cannot apply herself to those things which are of the utmost concern to her. Addison.

4. Passion; affection; regard.

Ah, what concerns did both your souls divide!

Your honour gave us what your love deny'd. Dryden.

O Marcia, let me hope thy kind concerns,

And gentle wishes, follow me to battle! Addison.

Why all this concern for the poor? We want them not, as the country is now managed: where the plough has no work, one family can do the business of fifty. Swift.

CONCERNING, prep. [from concern; this word, originally a participle, has before a noun the force of a preposition.] Relating to; with relation to.

There is not any thing more subject to error than the true judgment concerning the power and forces of an estate. Bacon.

The ancients had no higher recourse than to nature, as may appear by a discourse concerning this point in Strabo. Brown.

None can demonstrate that there is such an island as Jamaica, yet, upon testimony, I am free from all doubt concerning it. Tillotson.

CONCERNMENT, n. f. [from concern.]

1. The thing in which we are concerned or interested; affair; business; interest.

To mix with thy concernments I desist

Henceforth, nor too much disapprove my own. Milton.

This shews how useful you have been;

To bring the king's concernments in. Hudibras.

Yet when we're sick, the doctor's fetch in haste,

Leaving our great concernment to the last. Denham.

When my concernment takes up no more room or compass than myself, then, so long as I know where to breathe and to exist, I know also where to be happy. South.

He that is wise in the affairs and concernments of other men, but careless and negligent of his own, that man may be said to be busy, but he is not wise. Tillotson.

Our spiritual interests, and the great concernment of a future state, would doubtless recur often. Atterbury.

Propositions which extend only to the present life, are small, compared with those that have influence upon our everlasting concernments. Watts.

2. Relation; influence.

Sir, 'tis of near concernment, and imports

No less than the king's life and honour. Denham.

He justly fears a peace with me would prove

Of ill concernment to his haughty love. Dryden.

3. Intercourse; business.

The great concernment of men is with men, one amongst another. Locke.

4. Importance; moment.

I look upon experimental truths as matters of great concernment to mankind. Boyle.

5. Interposition; regard; meddling.

He married a daughter to the earl, without any other concernment or probation probation of her father, or concomitance in it, than suffering him and her to come into his presence. Clarendon.

6. Passion; emotion of mind.

While they are so eager to destroy the same of others, their ambition is manifest in their concomitance. Dryden.

If it carry with it the notion of something extraordinary, if apprehension and concomitance accompany it, the idea is likely to sink the deeper. Locke.

The providences of God are promiscuously administered in this world; so that no man can conclude God's love or hatred to any person, by any thing that befalls him. Tilley.

4. To decide; to determine.

Youth, ere it sees the world, here studies rest;

And age, returning thence, concludes it best. Dryden.

But no frail man, however great or high,

Can be concluded blest before he die. Adison.

5. To end; to finish.

Is it concluded he shall be protector?

It is determin'd, not concluded yet;

But so it must be, if the king miscarry. Shakspeare.

I will conclude this part with the speech of a council of state. Edm.

These are my theme, and how the war began,

And how concluded by the godlike man. Dryden.

6. To oblige, as by the final determination.

If therefore they will appeal to revelation for their creed, they must be concluded by it. Hale.

He never refused to be concluded by the authority of one legally summoned. Atterbury.

To CONCLUDE. v. n.

1. To perform the last act of ratiocination; to collect the consequence; to determine.

For why should we the busy soul believe,

When boldly the concluders of that and this;

When of herself she can no judgment give,

Nor how, nor where, nor where, nor what the is? Dante.

The blind man's relations import no necessity of concluding, that though black was the roughness of colours, therefore white should be the smoothest. Boyle.

There is something infamous in the very attempt: the world will conclude I had a guilty conscience. Aristotle.

2. To settle opinion.

Can we conclude upon Luther's infallibility, as our author has done, because, in a single notion no way fundamental, an enemy writes that he had some doubts? Atterbury.

I question not but your translation will do honour to our country; for I conclude of it already from those performances. Adison to Pope.

3. Finally to determine.

They humbly sue unto your excellence,

To have a goodly peace concluded of.

Between the realms of England and of France. Shakspeare.

4. To end.

And all around wore nuptial bonds, the ties

Of love's assurance, and a train of lies,

That, made in lust, conclude in perjuries. Dryden.

CONCLUSION. n. f. [from concludere.] Consequence; regular proof; logical deduction of reason.

Judgment concerning things to be known, or the neglect and conclusion of them, ends in decision. Hale.

CONCLUSIVE. adj. [from conclude.] Decisive; ending in just and undeniable consequences.

Though these kind of arguments may seem more obvious, yet, upon a due consideration of them, they are highly consequential and conclusive to my purpose. Hale.

CONCLUSIBLE. adj. [from conclude.] Determinable; certain by regular proof.

'Tis as certainly conclusible from God's providence, that they will voluntarily do it, as that they will do it at all. Hamilton.

CONCLUSION. n. f. [from conclude.]

1. Determination; final decision.

Ways of peaceable conclusion there are but these two certain; the one a sentence of judicial decision, given by authority thereto appointed within ourselves; the other, the like kind of sentence given by a more universal authority. Haller.

2. The collection from propositions premised; the consequence.

The conclusion of experience, from the time past to the time present, will not be found and perfect. Bacon.

And marrying divers principles and grounds,

Out of their match a true conclusion brings. Dante.

Then doth the wit

Build fond conclusions on those idle grounds;

Then doth it fly the good, and ill pursue. Dante.

I only deal by rules of art, South.

- Such as are lawful, and judge by Conclusion of astrology. Hudibras.
It is of the nature of principles, to yield a conclusion different from themselves. Tilleyson.
He granted him both the major and the minor; but denied him the conclusion. Adelphi.
3. The close; the last result of argumentative deduction.
Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter, fear God and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man.
Eccl. xii. 13.
I have been reasoning, and in conclusion have thought it best to return to what fortune hath made my home. Swift.
4. The event of experiments.
Her physician tells me,
She has pursued conclusion infinite
Of easy ways to die. Shakespeare.
We practice likewise all conclusions of grafting and inoculating, as well of wild trees as fruit trees. Bacon.

6. In State conclusion it seems to signify silence; confinement of the thoughts.
Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes
And still conclusion, shall acquire no honour, Demanding upon me. Shakespeare.
- CONCLUSIVE, adj. [from conclude.]
1. Decisive; giving the last determination to the opinion.
The agreeing votes of both houses were not by any law or reason conclusive to my judgment. King Charles.
The last dictate of the understanding is not always absolute in itself, not conclusive to the will, yet it produces no antecedent nor external necessity. Bacon. Answer to Hobbs.
They have secret reasons for what they seem to do, which, whatever they are, they must be equally conclusive for us as they were for them. Regent.
2. Regularly consequential.
Those that are not men of art, not knowing the true forms of syllogism, cannot know whether they are made in right and conclusive modes and figures. Locke.
- CONCLUSIVELY, adv. [from conclusive.] Decisively; with final determination.
This I speak only to desire Pollio and Espolis not to speak presumptuously, or conclusively, touching the point of possibility, if they have heard me deduce the means of the execution.
Bacon's Holy War.
- CONCLUSIVENESS, n. f. [from conclusive.] Power of determining the opinion; regular consequence.

with them. Boyle.
They do but coagulate themselves, without concoagulating with them any water. Boyle.
- CONCOGULATION, n. f. [from concoagulate.] A coagulation by which different bodies are joined in one mass.
8. CONCOCT, v. a. [from concoct, Latin.]
1. To digest by the stomach, so as to turn food to nutriment.
The working of purging medicines cometh two or three hours after the medicines taken; for that the stomach first maketh a proof, whether it can concoct them. Bacon.
Assuredly he was a man of a feeble stomach, unable to con- coct any great fortune, prosperous or adverse. Hayward.
The vital functions are performed by general and constant laws; the food is concocted, the heart beats, the blood circulates, the lungs play. Chyzer.
The notions and sentiments of others judgment, as well as of our own memory makes our property: it does, as it were, concoct our intellectual food, and turns it into a part of our selves. Watts.
2. To purify or sublime by heat; or heighten to perfection.
The small close-lurking minister of fate,
Whose high concocted venom through the veins
A rapid lightning darts. Thersites.
- CONCOCTION, n. f. [from concoct.] Digestion in the stomach; maturation by heat; the acceleration of any thing towards purity and perfection.
This hard rolling is between concoction and a simple maturation.
The constant notion of concoction is, that it should signify the degrees of alteration of one body into another, from cradity to perfect concoction, which is the ultimity of that action or process. Bacon.
He, though he knew not which foul spake,
Because both meant, both spake the same,
Might thence a new concoction take,
And put far purer than he came. Dante.
- CONCOLOUR, adj. [from concolor, Latin.] Of one colour without variety.
In concolor animals, and such as are confined unto the same
No NAME.

- colour, we measure not their beauty thereby; for if a cow or blackbird grow white, we account it more pretty. Brown.
- CONCOMITANCE, n. f. [from concomiter, Latin.] Subsistence
CONCOMITANCY, s. together with another thing.
The secondary action subsisteth not alone, but in concomi-
tancy with the other; so the nostrils are useful for respiration and smelling, but the principal use is smelling. Brown.
To argue from a concomitancy to a causality, is not infallibly conclusive. Glanville.
- CONCOMITANT, adj. [from concomitans, Latin.] Conjoined with; concurrent with; coming and going with, as collateral, not causative, or consequential.
It is the spirit that furtherth the extension or dilatation of bodies, and it is ever concomitant with porosity and dryness.
Bacon's Natural History.
It has pleased our wife Creator to annex to several objects, as also to several of our thoughts, a concomitant pleasure; and that in several objects, to several degrees. Locke.
- CONCOMITANT, n. f. Companion; person or thing collaterally connected.
These effects are from the local motion of the air, a concomi- tant of the sound, and not from the sound. Bacon.
He made him the chief concomitant of his heir apparent and only son, in a journey of much adventure. Hutton.
In consumptions the preternatural concomitants, an universal heat of the body, a torminous diarrhoea, and hot distillations, have all a correlative quality.
The other concomitant of ingratitude is hard-heartedness, or want of compassion. Stanh.
- Horror stalks around,
Wild flaring, and his sad concomitant,
Despair, of abject look. Philips.
Reproach is a concomitant to greatness, as fatires and invecti-ves were an essential part of a Roman triumph. Adelphi.
And for tobacco, who could bear it?
Filthy concomitant of claret! Prior.
Where antecedents, concomitants and consequents, causes and effects, signs and things signified, subjects and adjuncts, are necessarily connected with each other, we may infer.
Watts's Logic.
- CONCOMITANTLY, adv. [from concomitant.] In company with others. Deid.

CONSTABLE. n. f. [comes stabuli, as it is supposed.]

1. Lord high constable is an ancient officer of the crown, long diffused in England, but lately subsisting in France; where the constable commanded the marshals, and was the first officer of the army. The function of the constable of England consisted in the care of the common peace of the land, in deeds of arms, and in matters of war. To the court of the constable and marshal belonged the cognizance of contracts, deeds of arms without the realm, and combats and blasons of arms within it. The first constable of England was created by the Conqueror, and the office continued hereditary 'till the thirteenth of Henry VIII. when it was laid aside, as being so powerful as to become troublesome to the king. From these mighty magistratures are derived the inferior constables of hundred and franchises; two of whom were ordained, in the thirteenth of Edward I. to be chosen in every hundred for the conservation of the peace, and view of armour. These are now called high constables, because continuance of time, and increase both of people and offences, have occasioned others in every town of like nature, but inferior authority, called petty constables. Besides these, we have constables denominated from particular places; as constable of the Tower, of Dover castle, of the castle of Cornwaryn; but these are properly castellans, or governors of castles. Cowd. Chambers.

When I came hither, I was lord high constable.

And duke of Buckingham; now poor Edward Bohun. Shak.

The knave constable had me i' th' stocks, i' th' common stocks, for a witch. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

The constable being a sober man, and known to be an enemy to these acts of sedition, went among them, to observe what they did. Clarendon.

2. To over-run the CONSTABLE. [Perhaps from conste stable, Fr. the settled, firm, and stated account.] To spend more than what a man knows himself to be worth; a low phrase.

CONSTABLESHIP. n. f. [from constable.] The office of a constable.

This keepership is annexed to the constableness of the castle, and that granted out in lease. Carver's Survey of Cornwall.

CONSTANCY. n. f. [from constans, Latin.]

1. Immutability; perpetuity; unalterable continuance.

The laws of God himself no man will ever deny to be of a different constitution from the former, in respect of the one's constancy, and the mutability of the other. Hooker.

2. Constancy; unvaried state.

Incredible, that constancy in such a variety, such a multiplicity, should be the result of chance. Ray on the Creation.

3. Resolution; firmness; steadiness; unshaken determination.

In a small isle, amidst the widest seas,

Triumphant constancy has fix'd her seat;

In vain the tyrants ling, the tempests beat. Prior.

4. Lasting affection; continuance of love, or friendship.

Constancy is such a stability and firmness of friendship, as overlooks and passes by lesser failures of kindness, and yet still retains the same habitual good-will to a friend. South.

5. Certainty; veracity; reality.

But all the story of the night told over,
More witless than fancy's images,
And grows to something of great constancy,
But, however, strange and admirable. Shakespeare. Care.

CONSTANT. adj. [from constans, Latin.]

1. Firm; fixed; not fluid.

If you take highly rectified spirit of wine, and dephlegmed spirit of urine, and mix them, you may turn these two fluid liquids into a constant body. Boyle's History of Fire &c.

2. Unvaried; unchanged; immutable; durable.

3. Firm; resolute; determined; immovable; unshaken.

Some threat contents,

Now steal the colour from Bassanio's cheek:

Some dear friend dead; else nothing in the world

Could turn so much the constitution

Of any constant man. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.

4. Free from change of affection.

N° XXX.

Both loving one fair maid, they yet remained constant friends. Sidney.

5. Certain; not various; steady; firmly adherent.

Now, through the land, his care of souls he stretch'd,

And like a primitive apostle preach'd;

Still cheerful, ever constant to his call;

By many follow'd, lov'd by most, admir'd by all. Dryden.

He shew'd his firm adherence to religion as modelled by our national constitution, and was constant to its offices in devotion, both in public and in his family. Aldison's Freeholder.

CONSTANTLY. adv. [from constant.] Unvariably; perpetually;

certainly; steadily.

CONTEMPERATION. n. f. [from temperare.]

1. The act of diminishing any quality by admixture of the contrary; the act of moderating or tempering.

The use of air, without which there is no continuation in life, is not nutrition, but the contemperation of fervour in the heart.

2. Proportionate mixture; proportion.

There is not greater variety in men's faces, and in the temperament of their natural humours, than there is in their phantasies.

To CONTEMPERATE. v. a. [contempero, Lat.] To qualify with continued attention; to study; to meditate.

There is not much difficulty in confining the mind to temperate what we have a great desire to know.

To CONTEMPLE. v. n. To muse; to think studiously; with long attention.

So many hours must I take my rest;

So many hours must I contemperate.

Sapor had a heaven of glass, which he trod upon, contem- plating over the same as if he had been Jupiter.

How can I consider what belongs to myself, when I have been so long contemplating on you.

So many hours must I take my rest;

So many hours must I contemperate.

Sapor had a heaven of glass, which he trod upon, contem- plating over the same as if he had been Jupiter.

How can I consider what belongs to myself, when I have been so long contemplating on you.

So many hours must I take my rest;

So many hours must I contemperate.

Sapor had a heaven of glass, which he trod upon, contem- plating over the same as if he had been Jupiter.

How can I consider what belongs to myself, when I have been so long contemplating on you.

So many hours must I take my rest;

So many hours must I contemperate.

Sapor had a heaven of glass, which he trod upon, contem- plating over the same as if he had been Jupiter.

How can I consider what belongs to myself, when I have been so long contemplating on you.

So many hours must I take my rest;

So many hours must I contemperate.

Sapor had a heaven of glass, which he trod upon, contem- plating over the same as if he had been Jupiter.

How can I consider what belongs to myself, when I have been so long contemplating on you.

CONT'EMPLA'TION. n. f. [from contemplate.]

1. Meditation; studious thought on any subject; continued attention.

How now, what serious contemplation are you in?

Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. Holy meditation; a holy exercise of the soul, employed in attention to sacred things.

Contemplation is keeping the idea, which is brought into the mind, for some time actually in view.

3. Holy meditation; a holy exercise of the soul, employed in attention to sacred things.

I have breathed a secret vow,

To live in prayer and contemplation,

Only attended by Nerissa here.

3. The faculty of study; opposed to the power of action.

There are two functions, contemplation and practice, according to that general division of objects; some of which entertain our speculations, others employ our actions.

Contemplative. adj. [from contemplate.]

1. Given to thought or study; studious; thoughtful.

First and contemplative their looks;

Still turning over nature's books.

2. Employed in study; dedicated to study.

I am no courtier, nor versed in state affairs: my life hath rather been contemplative than active.

Contemplative men may be without the pleasure of discovering the secrets of fate, and men of action are commonly without the pleasure of tracing the secrets of divine art.

3. Having the power of thought or meditation.

So many kinds of creatures might be to exercise the contemplative faculty of man.

Contemplatively. adv. [from contemplative.] Thoughtfully; attentively; with deep attention.

Contemplator. n. f. [Latin.] One employed in study; an enquirer after knowledge; a student.

In the Persian tongue the word mogzi imports as much as a contemplator of divine and heavenly science.

The Platonick contemplators reject both these descriptions, founded upon parts and colours.

Contemporary. adj. [from contemporain, French.]

1. Living in the same age; coetaneous.

Albert Durer was contemporary to Lucas.

Born at the same time.

A grove born with himself he fees,

And loves his old contemporary trees.

Existing at the same point of time.

It is impossible to make the ideas of yesterday, to-day, and to-morrow to be the same; or bring ages past and future together, and make them contemporary.

Contemporary. n. f. One who lives at the same time with another.

All this in blooming youth you have achiev'd;

Nor are your foil'd contemporaries griev'd.

As he has been favourable to me, he will hear of his kindness from our contemporaries; for we are fallen into an age illiterate, confusious, and detracting.

The active part of mankind, as they do most for the good of their contemporaries, very deservedly gain the greatest share in their applauses.

Contemporise. v. a. [from contempus, Latin.] To make contemporary; to place in the same age.

The indifference of their existences contemporised into our actions, admits a farther consideration.

Contempt. n. f. [from contemptus, Latin.]

1. The act of despising others; slight regard; scorn.

It was neither in contempt nor pride that I did not bow.

The shame of being miserable,

Exposes men to scorn and bale contempt,

Even from their nearest friends.

There is no action in the behaviour of one man towards another, of which human nature is more impatient than of contempt; it being a thing made up of these two ingredients, an undervaluing of a man, upon a belief of his utter uselessness and inability, and a spiteful endeavour to engage the rest of the world in the same belief and slight esteem of him.

His friend smil'd scornful, and with proud contempt

Rejects as idle what his fellow dreamt.

The state of being despised; vileness.

The place was like to come unto contempt.

Contemptible. adj. [from contempt.]

1. Worthy of contempt; deserving scorn.

No man truly knows himself, but he groweth daily more contemptible in his own eyes.

From no one vice exempt,

And most contemptible to shun contempt.

Despised; scorned; neglected.

There is not to contemptible a plant or animal that does not confound the most enlarged understanding.

Scornful; apt to despise. This is no proper use.

If he should make tender of her love, 'tis very possible he'll from it: for the man hath a contemptible spirit.

Contemptibleness. n. f. [from contemptible.] The state of being contemptible; the state of being despised; meanness; vileness; baseness; cheapness.

Who, by a steady practice of virtue, comes to discern the contemptibleness of those baits wherewith he allures us.

Contemptibly. adv. [from contemptible.] In a manner deserving contempt.

Know'lt thou not

Their language, and their ways? They also know,

And reason not contemptibly.

Contemptuous. adj. [from contempt.] Scornful; apt to despise; inclined to words or actions of contempt; insolent.

To neglect God all our lives, and know that we neglect him; to offend God voluntarily, and know that we offend him, calling our hopes on the peace which we trust to make at parting, is no other than a rebellious presumption, and even a contemptuous laughing to scorn and deriding of God, his laws and precepts.

Some much aver'd I found, and word'rous harshly,

Contemptuous; proud, set on revenge and spite.

Rome, the proudest part of the heathen world, entertained the most contemptuous opinion of the Jews.

Contemptuously. adv. [from contemptuous.] With scorn; with despise; scornfully; despitely.

I throw my name against the bounding stone,

Trampling contemptuously on thy diadem.

The apostles and most eminent Christians were poor, and used contemptuously.

If he governs tyrannically in youth, he will be treated contemptuously in age; and the bolder his enemies, the more intolerable the affront.

A wife man would not speak contemptuously of a prince, though out of his dominions.

Contemptuousness. n. f. [from contemptuous.] Disposition to contempt; insolence.

To contend. v. n. [from contendere, Latin.]

1. To strive; to struggle in opposition.

Heador's forehead put forth blood

At Grecian swords contending.

When he reads

Thy personal venture in the rebels flight,

His wonders and his praises do contend

Which should be thine or his.

Death and nature do contend about them,

Whether they live or die.

Dislike not the Moabites, neither contend with them in battle; for I will not give thee of their land.

To vie; to act in emulation.

It has far before the ground or cause of contention.

You sit above, and see vain men below

Content for what you only can bestow.

The question which our author would contend for, if he did not forget it, is what persons have a right to be obeyed.

Sometimes about.

He will find that many things he fiercely contend'd about were trivial.

It has with her are the opponent.

This battle fares like to the morning's war,

When dying clouds contend with growing light.

If we consider him as our maker, we cannot contend with him.

Sometimes agoing.

In ambitious strength I did

Content against thy valour.

To contend. v. a. To dispute any thing; to contend.

Their airy limbs in sports they exercise,

And on the green contend the wrestler's prize.

A time of war at length will come,

When Carthage shall contend the world with Rome.

Thus low we lie,

Shut from this day and that contended sky.

Contentent. n. f. [from content.] Antagonist; opponent; champion; combatant.

In all notable changes and revolutions the contentent have been still made a prey to the third party.

Contentender. n. f. [from content.] Combatant; champion.

The contenders for it, look upon it as an undeniable truth.

Those disputes often arise in good earnest, where the two contenders do really believe the different propositions which they support.

Content. adj. [from contentus, Latin.]

1. Satisfied so as not to repine; easy, though not highly pleased.

Born to the spacious empire of the Nine,

One would have thought the shou'd have been content,

To manage well that mighty government.

Who is content, is happy.

A man is perfectly content with the state he is in, when he is perfectly without any uneasiness.

Foe to loud praise, and fier'd to learned ease,

Content with science in the vale of peace.

2. Satisfied

2. Satisfied so as not to oppose.

Submit you to the people's voices,
Allow their officers, and be content
To suffer lawful censure.

Shakespeare.

To CONTENT, v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To satisfy so as to stop complaint; not to offend; to appease without plenary happiness or complete gratification.

Content thyself with this much, and let this satisfy thee, that I love thee.

Sidney.

It doth much content me

To hear him so inclin'd.

Shakespeare.

If a man so temper his actions, as in some one of them he doth content every faction, the mulick of praise will be fuller. Etc.

Great minds do sometimes content themselves to threaten, when they could destroy.

Tillotson.

Do not content yourselves with obscure and confused ideas, where clearer are to be attained.

Watts.

2. To please; to gratify.

Is the adder better than the eel,

Shakespeare.

Because his painted skin content the eye?

CONTENT, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Moderate happiness; such satisfaction as, though it does not fill up desire, appeases complaint.

Nought's had, all's spent,

Shakespeare.

Where our desire is got without content.

One thought content the good to be enjoy'd;

This every little accident destroy'd.

Dryden.

A wife content his even foul secur'd;

By want not shaken, nor by wealth allur'd.

Smith.

2. Acquiescence; satisfaction in a thing unexamined.

Others for language all their care exert,

And value books, as women men, for drest;

Their praise is still—the style is excellent;

The sense they humbly take upon content.

Pope.

3. [From contentus, contained.] That which is contained, or included in any thing.

Though my heart's content firm love doth bear,

Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear.

Shakespeare.

Scarcely any thing can be certainly determined of the particular contents of any single mass of ore by mere inspection.

Woodward's Natural History.

These experiments are made on the blood of healthy animals: in a lax and weak habit such a serum might afford other contents.

Arbuthnot.

4. The power of containing; extent; capacity.

This island had then fifteen hundred strong ships, of great content.

Bacon.

It were good to know the geometrical content, figure, and situation of all the lands of a kingdom, according to natural bounds.

Grount.

5. That which is comprised in a writing. In this sense the plural only is in use.

I have a letter from her

Of such contents, as you will wonder at.

Shakespeare.

I shall prove these writings not counterfeits, but authentic, and the contents true, and worthy of a divine original.

Grew's Cyclo.

The contents of both books come before those of the first book, in the thread of the story.

Addison.

CONTENTATION, n. f. [from content.] Satisfaction; content.

I seek no better warrant than my own conscience, nor no greater pleasure than mine own contentation.

Sidney.

The shield was not long after incrustured with a new rust, and is the same; a cut of which hath been engraved and exhibited, to the great contentation of the learned.

Arbuthnot.

CONTENTED, participial adj. [from content.] Satisfied; at quiet; not repining; not demanding more; easy, though not pleasantly happy.

Barbarossa, in hope by sufferance to obtain another kingdom, seemed contented with the answer.

Knellet.

Dream not of other worlds,

Contented that thus far has been reveal'd,

Not of earth only, but of highest heav'n.

Milton.

If he can defy

Some nobler foe approach, to him he calls,

And begs his fate, and then contented falls.

Denham.

To distant lands Vertumnus never roves,

Like you, contented with his native groves.

Pope.

CONTENTION, n. f. [from content, Latin.]

1. Strife; debate; contest; quarrel; mutual opposition.

Can we with manners ask what was the difference?

—Safely, I think; 'twas a contention in publick.

Shakespeare.

But avoid foolish questions and genealogies, and contentious and strivings.

Tillotson.

Can they keep themselves in a perpetual contention with their ease, their reason, and their God, and not endure a short combat with a sinful custom.

Decay of Piety.

The ancients made contention the principle that reigned in the chaos at first, and then love; the one to express the divisions, and the other the union of all parties in the middle and common bond.

Burnet.

2. Emulation; endeavour to excel.

Sons and brother at a strife!

What is your quarrel? how began it first?

—No quarrel, but a sweet contention.

Shakespeare.

3. Earnestness; zeal; ardour; vehemence of endeavour.

Your own earnestness and contention to effect what you are about, will continually suggest to you several artifices.

Hilder.

This is an end, which, at first view, appears worthy our utmost contention to obtain.

Koger.

CONTENTIOUS, adj. [from content.] Quarrelsome; given to debate; perverse; not peaceable.

Thou think'st much that this contentious storm

Invaues us to the skin.

Shakespeare.

There are certain contentious humours that are never to be pleased.

L'Estrange.

Rest made them idle, idleness made them curious, and curiosity contentious.

Decay of Piety.

CONTENTIOUS Jurisdiction. [In law.] A court which has a power to judge and determine differences between contending parties. The lord chief justices, and judges, have a contentious jurisdiction; but the lords of the treasury, and the commissioners of the customs, have none, being merely judges of accounts and transactions.

Chambers.

CONTENTIOUSLY, adv. [from contentious.] Perverbly; quarrelsome.

We shall not contentiously rejoin, or only to justify our own, but to applaud and confirm his maturer assertions.

Brown.

Brown.

CONTENTLESS, adj. [from content.] Discontented; dissatisfied; uneasy.

Best states, contentless,

Have a distracted and most wretched being,
Worse than the worst content.

Shakespeare.

CONTENTMENT, n. f. [from content, the verb.]

1. Acquiescence without plenary satisfaction.

Such mens contentment must be wrought by stratagem: the usual method of fare is not for them.

Hume.

Submission is the only reasoning between a creature and its Maker, and contentment in his will is the best remedy we can apply to misfortunes.

Tennis.

Contentment, without external honour, is humility; without the pleasure of eating, temperance.

Grew.

Some place the bliss in action, some in ease,
Those call it pleasure, and contentment these.

Pope.

But now no face divine contentment wears,
'Tis all blank sadness, or continual tears.

Pope.

2. Gratification.

At Paris the prince spent one whole day, to give his mind some contentment in viewing of a famous city.

Watts.

Who having, by their own importunate suit,
Or voluntary dotage of some mistress,
Convinc'd or supplied them, they cannot chuse
But they must blab. Shakspeare, Othello.

When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I, with wine and wassail, so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

CONVICEMENT. n. f. [from convince.] Conviction.

If that be not convincement enough, let him weigh the other also.

Decay of Pity.

CONVINCE. adj. [from convince]

1. Capable of conviction.

2. Capable of being evidently disproved, or detected.

Upon what uncertainties, and also convincible fallacies, they often erected such emblems, we have elsewhere delivered.

CONVINCINGLY. adv. [from convince.] In such a manner as to leave no room for doubt or dispute; so as to produce conviction.

This he did so particularly convincingly, that those of the parliament were in great confusion. Clarendon.

The resurrection is so convincingly attested by such persons, with such circumstances, that they who consider and weigh the testimony, at what distance forever they are placed, cannot entertain any more doubt of the resurrection than the crucifixion of Jesus. Atterbury's Sermons.

CONVINCINGNESS. n. f. [from convincing.] The power of convincing.

TO CONVIVE. v. a. [convivo, Latin.] To entertain; to feast. A word, I believe, not elsewhere used.

First, all you peers of Greece, go to my tent,

There in the full convive you. Shakspeare.

CONVIVAL. adj. [convivialis, Latin.] Relating to an convivial } entertainment; festive; social.

Convolv'd and agonizing in the dust. Thomson's Autumn.

CONVOLUTED. part. [of the verb I have found no example.] Twisted; rolled upon itself.

This differs from Mucovogy-glass only in this, that the plates of that are flat and plain, whereas these are convoluted and inflected. Woodward on Fossil.

CONVOLUTION. n. f. [convolutio, Latin.]

1. The act of rolling any thing upon itself; the state of being rolled upon itself.

Observe the convolution of the said fibres in all other glands, in the same or some other manner. Grew.

A thousand secret, subtle pipes bestow,

From which, by numerous convolutions wound,

Wrap'd with th' attending nerve, and twisted round. Blackm.

2. The state of rolling together in company.

And told's wide round,

O'er the calm sea, in convolution swift

The feather'd eddy floats. Thomson's Autumn.

TO CONVOY. v. a. [convoyer, Fr. from convoyare, low Latin.] To accompany by land or sea for the sake of defence; as, he was conveyed by ships of war.

CONVOY. n. f. [from the verb. Anciently the accent was on the last syllable; it is now on the first.]

1. Attendance on the road by way of defence.

Sister, as the winds give benefit,

And convoy is assistance, do not sleep,

But let me hear from you. Shakspeare. Hamlet.

Such fellows will learn you by rote where services were done; at such a breach, at such a convoy. Shakspeare. Henry V.

Had not God set peculiar value upon his temple, he would not have made himself his people's convoy to secure them in their passage to it.

South's Sermons.

My soul grows hard, and cannot death endure,

Your convoy makes the dangerous way secure. Dryden.

Convoy ships accompany their merchants till they may prosecute the voyage without danger.

Dryden.

COOKERY. n. f. [from cook.] The art of dressing victuals.

Some man's wit

Found the art of cool'ry to delight his sense :
More bodies are confus'd and kill'd with it,
Than with the sword, famine, or pestilence. Davies.
I try one to cool'ry pretends. King's Art of Cookery.
These are the ingredients of plants before they are prepared by cool'ry. Arbutnot.

COOL, adj. [coolen, Dutch.]

1. Somewhat cold; approaching to cold.
He let his leg in a pale-full, as hot as he could well endure
it, renewing it as it grew cool. Temple.
2. Not zealous; not ardent; not angry; not fond; without passion.

COOL, n. f. Freedom from heat; soft and refreshing coldness.

But ice, where Lucia, at her wonted hour,
Amid' the cool of yon high marble arch,
Enjoys the noon-day breeze. Addison.
Philander was joining the cool of the morning, among the dews that lay on every thing about him, and that gave the air a freshness. Addison.

COOL, v. a. [coolen, Dutch.]

1. To make cool; to allay heat.
Snow they use in Naples instead of ice, because, as they say, it cools or congeals any liquor sooner. Addison.
Jelly of currants, or the jelly of any ripe subacid fruit, is cooling, and very agreeable to the stomach. Arbutnot.
2. To quiet passion; to calm anger; to moderate zeal.

It is but as a body light dissembler'd,
Which to its former strength may be restor'd,
With good advice and little medicine;
My lord Northumberland will soon be cool'd. Shakespeare.
He will keep his jealousy to himself, and repine in private, because he will be apt to fear some ill effect it may produce in cooling your love to him. Addison.

They tell us, that had they thought they had been fighting only other peoples quarrels, perhaps it might have cooled their zeal. Swift.

COOL, v. n.

1. To grow less hot.
2. To grow less warm with regard to passion or inclination.
My humour shall not cool; I will incense Ford to deal with poison; I will possess him with yellowfever. Shakespeare.
You never cool while you read Homer. Dryden.
I'm impatient 'till it be done; I will not give myself liberty to think, lest I should cool. Congreve.

COOLER, n. f. [from cool.]

1. That which has the power of cooling the body.
Coolers are of two sorts; first, those which produce an immediate sense of cold, which are such as have their parts in less motion than those of the organs of feeling; and secondly, such as, by particular viscosity, or grossness of parts, give a greater consistence to the animal fluids than they had before, whereby they cannot move so fast, and therefore will have less of that intestine force on which their heat depends. The former are fruits, all acid liquors, and common water; and the latter are such as cucumbers, and all substances producing viscosity. Quin y.

In dogs or cats there appeared the same necessity for a cooler
as in man. Harvey.
Acid things were used only as coolers. Arbutnot.

2. A vessel in which any thing is made cool.
Your first wort being thus boiled, lade off into one or more coolers, or cool-backs, in which leave the dregs behind, and let it run off fine. Mortimer.

COOLLY, adv. [from cool.]

1. Without heat, or sharp cold.
She in the gelid caverns, woodbine wrought,
And fresh bedew'd with ever-spouting streams,
Sits coolly calm. Thomson.

2. Without passion.
Motives that address themselves coolly to our reason, are fittest to be employed upon reasonable creatures. Atterbury.

COOLNESS, n. f. [from cool.]

1. Gentle cold; a soft or mild degree of cold.
This difference consisteth not in the heat or coolness of spirits; for cloves, and other spices, naphtha and petroleum, have exceeding hot spirits, hotter a great deal than oil, wax, or tallow, but not inflamed. Bacon.

The toad loveth shade and coolness. Bacon.
Yonder the harvest of cold months laid up,
Gives a fresh coolness to the royal cup,
There, ice like crystal, firm and never lost,
Temper hot July with December's frost. Waller.

The sheep enjoy the coolness of the shade. Dryden.
2. Want of affection; disinclination.
They parted with such coolness towards each other, as if they scarce hoped to meet again. Clarendon.

3. Freedom from passion.

Skinner.] A measure of corn containing four bushels. Bailey.
COOP, n. f. [coope, Dutch.]

1. A barrel; a vessel for the preservation of liquid.
2. A cage; a pen for animals; as poultry or sheep.
When Gracchus was slain, the same day the chickens refused to eat out of the coop; and Claudius Pulcher underwent the like success, when he contemned the tripodary augurians.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.
There were a great many crammed capons together in a coop. L'Estrange.

TO COOP, v. a. [from the noun.] To shut up in a narrow compass; to confine; to cage; to imprison.

That pale, that white-fac'd shore,
Whole foot spurs back the ocean's roaring tides,
And coops from other lands her islanders. Shakespeare.
The Englishmen did coop up the lord Ravenstein, that he flirted not; and likewise held in strait fence the maritime part of the town. Bacon.

In the taking of a town the poor escape better than the rich; for the one is let go, and the other is plundered and cooped up. L'Estrange.

Twice conquer'd cowards, now your shame is shown,
Coop'd up a second time within your town!
Who dare not issue forth in open field. Dryden.

One world fustic'd not Alexander's mind;
Coop'd in earth and seas confin'd. Dryden.

Coop'd in a narrow ile, observing dreams
With fluttering wizards. Dryden.

The Trojans, coop'd within their walls so long,
Unbar their gates, and issue in a throng. Dryden.

The contempt of all other knowledge, as if it were nothing in comparison of law or physics, of astrology or chymistry, coops the understanding up within narrow bounds, and hinders
